Oil Spills Not Harmful?

By MARGOT HORNBLOWER
Washington Post

NEW ORLEANS — Offshore oil pollution is a nuisance, but there is not much hard evidence that spills have any long-term effect of marine or plant life, oil spill experts here say.

Nor is oil pollution a human health hazard, as far as scientists have been able to determine, said representatives of industry, universities and the Environmental Protection Agency at a conference on oil spills.

"I've never heard of a permanently crippled environment because of an oil spill," said Kenneth Biglane, the Environmental Protection Agency's chief oil spill expert. But EPA is sponsoring expensive research because, he said, "We don't know the full effect of oil on the enviroment, and so long as there's any doubt the public is concerned."

Science may never provide an absolute answer. But as more than a dozen papers presented here this week shows, evidence is mounting from government, industry and university research, that nature is absorbing oil spills with little trauma.

On Feb. 2, 1976, a barge sunk at the mouth of the Potomac River spilling 250,000 gallons of sticky black oil into Chesapeake Bay. Beaches and marshes were fouled, thousands of birds were killed and Virginia officials predicted dire consequences for the area's shellfish industry.

However, after a six-week cleanup, the beaches were virtually free of oil. In a few months the marsh grass had grown back thicker than before. And, after an eight-month study, the Virginia Institute of Marine Science found no effect on mussels and oysters.

The case of the Chesapeake Bay spill, reported at a conference of oil-spill experts here, is not unusual. Despite public outcry over a rash of recent tanker accidents, the danger of oil spills appears to have been exaggerated.

When James N. Butler, a Harvard chemistry professor, started oil-pollution research six years ago, he recalled, "Jacques Cousteau (the undersea explorer) was saying that the oceans were dying and I was fairly alarmed. But the longer "I've been in the business, the less true that seems to be."

Butler studied tar lumps from oil tanker discharges in the central Atlantic and found no discernible effect on ocean plants or animals. Other scientists, under contract from the American Petroleum Insti-

Fishboat Sinks

A 59-foot packer loaded with herring sank this morning in Georgia Strait, the seventh fishing boat that has foundered since the herring season started.

A spokesman at Pacific Rescue Centre said the two crew members aboard the B.C. Bird reported the vessel taking on water at 9:02 a.m. about mid-way between Bowen Island and Nanaimo.

Eighteen minutes later the centre received word the boat had sunk. The crewmen were picked up by a passing fishboat, the Helen 2.

KITIMAT PROBER WELCOMED

VANCOUVER (CP) — Environmental and pipeline spokesmen are happy with the choice of Andrew Thompson as head of a public inquiry into the proposed Kitimat oil port and tanker route, but are disappointed with the time allowed for the inquiry.

"We're very disappointed in the time frame," Jack Cressey, project manager of the proposed Kitimat-to-Edmonton pipeline, said in an interview Friday.

He said construction of the project should begin no later than next winter to meet the needs of the United States to have crude oil by April, 1979, "and there is no hope under this schedule."

The consortium behind the $500 million proposed pipeline will reevaluate its plans in light of the delay, he said. "We have to look at whether all of our partners want to continue in — because if they don't, the project will just have to be aborted."

Justice Minister Ron Basford announced Friday that Thompson, a university of British Columbia law Professor specializing in environmental law and a former chairman of the B.C. Energy Commission, would head the full-scale public inquiry.

Cressey and environmental spokesmen said they are extremely pleased with the government's decision.

"We couldn't be happier with the government's choice," said Gary Gallon, executive director of the scientific pollution and environmental control society.

"He's fair, he won't kowtow to the federal government, he has a mind of his own and we have observed his work," Gallon said.

Thompson, energy commission chairman from 1973 to 1975, also was a founding member of the Canadian Petroleum Law Foundation and is on its board of directrors.

He is chairman of the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee.

KANSAS CITY — Parts of the western plains remained paralysed early today after a blizzard dumped about 30 centimetres (12 inches) of snow in some area, stranding motorists, disrupting utilities and blowing away topsoil from already stripped fields.

In Kansas, two farmers were reported missing, one since Thursday night, as blowing snow hampered traffic.

Five deaths were blamed on the storm in Colorado. Three persons died when their car overturned on a snow-covered highway, and the bodies of two men were found in a wrecker stranded in snow near Colorado Springs.

The snow turned to rain in some areas, but a second storm was forecast to enter the area late Sunday.

Highways on three sides of Denver were blocked by snow that was being pushed into drifts by winds gusting up to 150 kilometres an hour (95 m.p.h.)

The closing of Interstate 70 and U.S. 36 stranded 200 people in the town of Strasburg, Colo., 40 miles east of Denver, doubling the town's population.

Tornadoes tore up trees, and knocked down homes in other western and plains states.

Eastern states, meanwhile basked in record warmth.

Tornadoes were reported Friday in Texas, Louisiana and Missouri. One tornado touched down near Marshall, Tex., leaving a swath of uprooted trees in its wake.

"It's lousy. Sixty mile an hour winds — gusts up to 75. (96.5 — 120.6 k.p.h.)

There's no moisture anywhere," said a sheriff's spokesman in Potter County. "The dirt is about to blow us all away."

The weather wasn't affecting plans to open the annual Rattlesnake Roundup at Sweetwater, Tex., where more than 5,000 pounds of snakes already were waiting.

Tornadoes also created havoc in northeastern Louisiana, but no injuries were reported. Another tornado hit Isabella, Mo., injuring at least one mobile home resident.

Agriculture officials in Colorado said the moisture will help parched fields, but said the areas that received no snow were damaged by the high winds, and traffic in some areas with little snow was hindered by blowing dust. (See picture on Page 2.)

Fire Risk After Pot Count?

VANCOUVER (CP) — A human rights board of inquiry reserved decision Friday on whether the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia committed discrimination when it cancelled the fire insurance of a man who had been charged with trafficking in marijuana.

Leon Getz, chairman of the one-man board, said he would announce his decision next week.

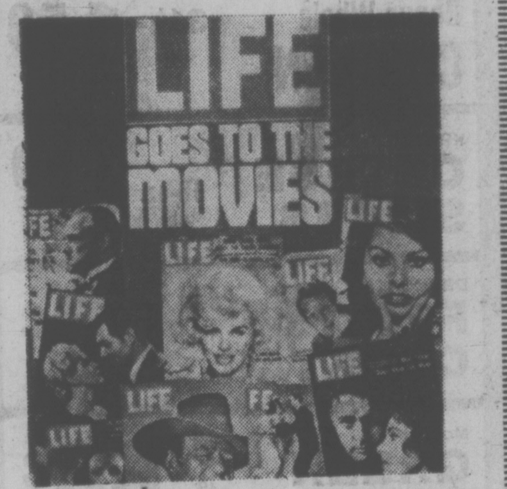
Stein Gudmundseth, lawyer for the human rights commission, argued that there were no reasonable grounds under the human rights code for ICBC to cancel the fire insurance held by Robert Heerspink on two buildings in Sidney.

Heerspink's trial on the marijuana charge comes up in Victoria provincial court next week.

Gudmundseth argued that in arguing for the right to cancel Heerspink's insurance ICBC was seeking the right "to be arbitrary, to be reckless and to discriminate."

The human rights commission argued that under the code the only grounds for discrimination in insurance is sex, which may be considered in assessing risk.

Ken Mackenzie, lawyer for ICBC, said insurance law specifically allows ICBC to cancell a policy within 15 days after sending notice by registered mail, as was done in the case of Heerspink.



Movie Contest Prizes Boosted

Ten copies of the book Life Goes to the Movies have been added to the growing list of prizes for the Times-CJVI Academy Award contest.

The grand prize has also been increased this year to include hotel accommodation and a side trip to Disneyland as well as air fare for two and a tour of Universal movie studio.

The book, which contains 761 photographs among its 304 pages, has been widely priased by reviewers.

Its retail price is $19.95.

Prizes are awarded in a draw from among those who have correctly predicted the winner of Academy Awards for best actor, best actress and best picture as announced March 28.

Official entry forms will be printed in the Times starting Monday.

Best actress — Marie-Christine Barrault, Faye Dunaway, Talia Shire, Sissy Spacek and Liv Ullman.

Ship-Building Boost 'Too Late' for Yarrows

The general manager of Yarrows said today increased federal subsidies for the shipbuilding industry still won't make B.C. competitive with foreign shipyards but should bring some "spinoff" business.

Don Challinor was commenting on word from Ottawa Friday that shipbuilding subsidies offered by the government are being increased from 12 to 20 per cent immediately to avoid imminent layoffs in the industry.

As far as the West Coast is concerned, the help comes far too late to avoid layofffs, he said. The Esquimalt yard had about 900 workers last summer and now has just over 100.

While there are no new construction contracts in sight, Challinor did say ship repair work is starting to pick up and he anticipates Yarrows will be busy, with a payroll of 400 to 500, by summer.

In Ottawa Friday, Industry Minister Jean Chretien said Canada is suffering from a worldwide downturn in the freight shipping market and overcapacity in the international industry.

Canadian shipyards were faced with intense competition from foreign shipbuilders who can count on extensive support from their governments, Chretien said.

Without new orders in the immediate future the industry could be faced with layoffs of 4,000 by the end of the year.

In B.C., Yarrows and Burrard Dry Dock in North Vancouver have about half of the province's shipbuilding capacity.

Chretien said the subsidy increase could cost up to $30 million over the next three years, depending upon its success in attracting new shipbuilding business.

The increased subsidies are effective immediately and will be offered on applications received between March 1 and Aug. 31. The government will consider further action later in the year.

The August deadline was set because orders must be received by then to avert layoffs in shipyards during 1978.

Review Rules Eased

OTTAWA (CP) — The government announced a loosening of Foreign Investment Review Act regulations Friday to allow foreign importing and distributing firms operating in Canada to set up new manufacturing businesses without being subject to review.

At present, takeover and new investment proposals by foreign-controlled companies are not permitted unless the firms can show there will be significant benefit — such as new jobs — to the country.

The new regulations also include provisions that would allow quicker review of takeovers and new investments involving less than $2 million in gross assets and less than 100 employees.

Industry Minister Jean Chretien said in a news release the changes recognize the relation between an established importing and distributing firm bringing in certain products and the setting up of a new business to assemble or manufacture those products.

Que. Keeps AA Rating

NEW YORK (UPI) — Quebec's Parti Quebecois government has received a vote of confidence from Moody's Investors Services with its announcement the election of the separatist government will not affect the AA rating of Quebec's provincial and hydro bonds.

The "factors of strength" for the bonds were not changed by the election so they will retain their designation as "high quality" issues, according to Moodys, one of the two leading U.S. bond rating services.

Islands Trust Changes Called Illegal

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

Changes to the Islands Trust Act proposed by the Social Credit government may be unconstitutional and illegal, Victoria NDP MLA Chas. Barber said Friday.

Liberal leader Gordon Gibson also attacked the bill in the legislature and introduced an amendment which would postpone any consideration of the changes for six months, a traditional "hoist" motion.

The Islands Trust Amendment Act, introduced last month by Municipal Affairs and Housing Minister Hugh Curtis, would remove responsibility for planning and zoning functions on the Gulf Islands from the regional districts and give it to the Islands Trust.

The Islands Trust is comprised of three general trustees, appointed by the provincial government, and two trustees from each of the 13 major Gulf Islands designated in the act. The two local trustees who are elected by their own island residents, sit on the trust only on matters concerning their particular island.

Barber said the amendment to the act may be unconstitutional because it gives greater power to the local trustees that they were originally elected to possess.

If Curtis called an election for the island trustees, that would be all right because residents would vote for the trustees on the clear understanding they would now have the power of planning and zoning functions, Barber said.

"But this seems most certainly unconstitutional."

Barber said the introduction of the amendments has caused such conflict and hostility between the regional districts and the Islands Trust that they will probably never be able to work together again.

The change upsets the balance of power that had been established between the trust and the regional districts.

The seven regional districts involved have already asked for a meeting with the premier and Curtis to discus the amendments. Initial reactions from the districts is strongly opposed to the increase in power of the trust.

Barber said the changes introduced by Curtis fail to pass what he call the "Gaglardi test."

He said he would probably trust Curtis who had a good reputation among municipalities, to appoint good people to be general trustees, "but would you trust Phil Gaglardi (the rambunctious former highways minister) to be re-

500 in London Protest Canada Seal Slaughter

Times News Services

LONDON — A crowd of at least 500 protested against the Newfoundland seal hunt today, parading through London with placards and presenting a petition to the Canadian High Commission.

The demonstration, which also left a petition at the Norwegian Embassy, was staged by various conservation and humane societies, including Friends of the Earth, the Animal Welfare Trust and the International Fund for Animal Welfare.

It was part of a concerted effort by European groups to press the Canadian government to stop the hunt on environmental and humane grounds.

The demonstration was timed to coincide with the start of the annual hunt for the white-coated seal pups.

In Blanc Sablon, Que., a four-nation protest expedition set up base headquarters today and vowed to end the annual hunt even if it costs human lives.

"We don't believe in martyrdom or risking lives needlessly, but this hunt has to stop or there won't be any seals left," Al Johnson, of San Francisco, vice-president of Greenpeace America, told a Montreal news conference Friday.

"We are determined to bring this hunt to a halt this year at the risk of our lives if necessary. We've done survival training and our equipment this year is better than last year's but we realize that some of us may not come back."

SHIP-BUILDING AID 'TOO LATE'

There also is an incentive grant of up to three per cent of costs of each vessel covered by subsidy if shipyards try to improve building methods and management performance.

Chretien said many countries competing with Canada had not restrained themselves in controlling industry capacity and the effects of a market turndown was being felt in the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and British Columbia.

Challinor said the 20 per cent subsidy won't make B.C. shipyards a match for foreign builders but it will make East Coast builders competitive. When yards in Eastern Canada are filled, West Coast yards benefit by getting some of what's left, he said.

Yarrows hopes to qualify for the three per cent subsidy on the recently-completed Burrard Inlet ferries it built, he said.

While Canadian shipyards have been getting a declining level of subsidy, foreign governments have been increasing susbidies to their yards in recent years, said Challinor.

The turnabout by government is welcome but obviously should have come sooner and there are many other moves Ottawa could make to help.

Among them is recognizing the need to carry Canadian trade goods in Canadian ships. There is a United Nations trade concept adopted by many countries which sees a 40-40-20 formula applied between trading nations.

He said that means trading partners agree 40 per cent of goods will be carried by ships of each country and only 20 per cent moved by other vessels.

60% Hike On Hydro?

VANCOUVER (CP) — Robert Bonner chairfan of British Columbia Hydro, said Friday that inflation and high borrowing costs to finance capital projects could mean a 60-per-cent rate increase for Hydro customers in the next five years.

He told the Vancouver Electic Club that the alternative was to thrust upon the community a deficiency in energy.

Bonner said the era of cheap energy is over.

"The last cheap oil is out of the ground, the last cheap natural gas has been used and the last cheap hydro-electric project was built five years ago."

116 JAILED FOR UIC FRAUD

OTTAWA (CP) — The courts sent 116 persons to jail last year and levied fines against 3,168 for defrauding the unemployment insurance system.

The number of prosecutions "indicates that there's some dirt in the system," said Larry St. Laurent, director general of Unemployment Insurance commission insurance policy.

"We are not going to find it all. That would be impossible," St. Laurent said Friday. But the commission has stepped up efforts to track down fraud.

Last year there were 4,453 UIC fraud cases started in the courts, compared with 2,647 in 1975.

The number of administrative penalties — settled out of court — increased by 90 per cent between 1975 and 1976. Last year, 50,956 claimants were penalized "for lesser fraud offences."

UIC benefit control officers investigated 528,456 cases last year, an increase of 26 per cent over 1975.

ISLANDS RULING 'ILLEGAL'

sponsible for this?" Barber asked.

He accused Curtis of being inconsistent. When Curtis was in opposition and the NDP set up the Islands Trust, Curtis was opposed to government-appointees having power over the elected trustees.

"Now he's given those appointees more power," Barber said.

Gibson threw back at Curtis a speech the minister had made as a Tory MLA when the Islands Trust was introduced in 1974.

Gibson also repeated as his own motion, an amendment to hoist the bill which was moved by Curtis in 1974.

The motion was not voted on and debate both on the bill and on Gibson's amendment will continue later in the session.

The bill infringes on the sacred principle, "not a Socred principle," Gibson said, of having locally-elected people govern local concerns.

Gibson repeated concerns expressed by the regional districts that the bill would take the government of the islands away from the regional districts and their elected members and put it in the hands of appointed people.

He referred to the Gulf Islands as "the jewels of B.C." and said he hoped the six months postponement would give the government a chance to consult with the trust and regional districts.

the weather

Cold moist air moving inland today will give continuing shower activity along the coast and a few showers of mixed rain and snow inland. There will be clearing in many areas tonight. On Sunday a few snowflurries will persist in the southeastern interior. Most other regions will have a mixture of cloud and sun shine. Increasing cloud with occasional rain will reach the north coast in the evening. Little change in the present temperature pattern is expected.

Oil Spill Just Mess?

tute, an industry group, compared marine organisms on Bermuda's tar-polluted beaches and clean beaches, and found virtually no difference in population or reproduction, according to a paper presented here.

"Cosmetics is what gets media attention" in an oil spill, said Charles C. Dates, the Coast Guard's chief scientist. After a 1969 off-shore well blowout near Santa Barbara "kids tracked oil onto white carpets. The boats got messed up. It's a headache."

But the uproar over the blowout ignored the fact that millions of gallons of oil have seeped naturally into the ocean off Santa Barbara for centuries. University of Southern California researchers reported here that marine organisms live and breathe well around the natural seeps, where there is more oil than around industrial rigs.

Oil is not a single substance, but a blend of thousands of compounds, experts here point out. Crude oil, as it spouts from the ground, varies from well to well. Different kinds of oil, depending on their composition, have vastly different environmental effects.

Of refined oils, No. 6, a heavy fuel used for industrial boilers, is considered among the least toxic. No. 6 was the oil spilled from the Chesapeake Bay barge and from the Argo Merchant tanker off Nantucket, Mass., in December. Despite predictions of ecological catastrophe, the Argo Merchant oil was washed out to sea without any apparent effects on New England fish, according to Coast Guard Adm. A.F. Fugaro.

However, No. 2 oil, a lighter home-heating fuel, can poison marine life if it is spilled in a confined area, as 100,000 gallons were off Falmouth, Mass., in a 1969 barge accident.

Today oil persists in a 10-acre marsh, according to John W. Farrington, a marine chemist at Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute in Massachusetts, and several shellfish beds are still closed. However, he said, no evidence exists that eating the shellfish would hurt people.

"We've tried to get doctors to tell us what are the acceptable levels (of oil). But no one knows," he said.

Farrington said some studies show that No. 2 oil reduces the ability of certain mussels to eat and grow, and that oil can kill marine larvae.

Zaire Denies Rebel Rising

KINSHASA, Zaire (UPI) — Officials here expressed surprise toda yat a rebel claim of an uprising in southern Zaire and scoffed at an Angolan denial that that nation was involved in an invasion.

While the government-controlled news media continued to speak about "aggression" — ostensibly by Angola — against Zaire, presidential palace sources said moves were being made to try to arrange a meeting between President Mobutu Sese Seko and Angolan President Agostinho Neto.

Meanwhile, the U.S. State Department said in Washington it will evacuate, at their request, eight of the 25 Americans working in the copper-rich province, 900 miles south of Kinshasa.

Information was scant from the "battle zone" in the former Katanga province.

Zairean newspapers and broadcasting stations merely said government troops were "crushing" several thousand mercenaries who invaded Zaire from Angola earlier in the week, occupied three towns and several villages and put eight Americans under house arrest.

A group calling itself the "Front for the National Liberation of the Congo issued a statement in Paris saying there was a "national uprising" in the south against the Mobutu government. Congo is the former name of Zaire.

The statement said the group was formed in 1963 from remnants of the late Moise Tshombe's followers chased into the then Portuguese colony of Angola. Tshombe leads a separatist movement in Katanga province.

Zaire charged Angola was behind the raid by mercenaries.

"Angola is a mere pawn which can only move on the orders of a manipulator," Mobutu said of President Agostinho Neto's regime that took control of the country with aid from Cuban troops, about 10,000 of whom remain.

"Lodge a complaint against that country, the leaders of which are manipulated by foreign powers, would do them too much honor," Mobutu said, according to the national news agency AZAP.

Chinese Head Tax 'Fair Price'

OTTAWA (CP)— Canada owes its 125,000 citizens of Chinese descent $159 million for immigration taxes collected from their ancestors from the 19th century to 1923, Art Lee, parliamentary secretary to the solicitor-general, said Friday.

Lee, whose great-grandfather came to Canada to help build the Canadian Pacific Railway, said however his fellow Chinese-Canadians now consider those so-called head taxes "a fair price for the benefits of being members of our society."

Speaking during Commons debate on proposed immigration law changes, Lee, who represents Vancouver East, said that $26.5 million was collected from Chinese immigrants wishing to enter Canada.

The debt, compounded at four-per-cent annual interest rate, was $159 million.

But while the Chinese faced the tax and other racist rules designed to limit their entry into the country, the Canadian government was luring Europeans to Canada with subisidized transportation and cheap land, he said.

The head tax for Chinese started at $50 but by 1903 was raised to $500. That applied for 20 years until the tax was dropped.

The Chinese Immigration Act and all its immigration restrictions were stricken from the law books in 1947.

Death's No Longer Riding with Him

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Incongruous is the word to describe it, this juxaposition of watercolor horses and the man who, perhaps more than any other, epitomizes superb mastery over snarling horsepower.

In a Victoria hostelry whose name and decor try to evoke the coaching days of Olde England, with hunting prints on the wall behind him (The Earl of Derby's Staghounds, The Royal Hunt in Windsor Park), the 37-year-old grandson of a Scottish gamekeeper picks at a seafood salad and talks of death.

It's a subject with which former world racing champion driver Jackie Stewart, O.B.E., has a more than passing acquaintance.

For a decade the spectre of it rode with him as he hurtled around the Grand Prix circuits, especially the infamous Nurburgring in Germany.

But the unspoken words at the lunchtime press conference say it all.

Driving cars faster and better than anyone else — 27 Grand Prix victories between 1965 and 1973, when he retired — was his life, something he had to do. And he obviously loved every minute.

Except, perhaps, each time when he would leave his home and family in Geneva, Switzerland, in search of fresh conquests.

Stewart admits: "Many times when I drove up the drive I'd look back in the mirror and think, Jesus, will I ever come back."

He says it was for his family's sake that he retired, although his wife Helen never put any pressure on him to do so.

How would he feel if his two young sons told him one day that they wanted to become racing drivers?

"I'd rather they didn't. I love my children very much. I would hate to think they might go through some of the dangers that I know exist.

"Also it would be tough on Helen because she has lived through one career and we have managed to survive. To be exposed to another set of frustrations and fears would be hard."

The conversation turns to the Nurburgring's 14.7-mile circuit, with 187 corners to negotiate on every lap.

It is, says the man who should know, "certainly the most difficult, demanding and dangerous" of the international tracks.

To drivers who live with the ever-present fear of fiery immolation, and who know that every second after a crash is vital, it's a stark reality that help at the Nuremburg course maybe as much as six minutes away.

It helps to explain Stewart's obsession with protective clothing, his inability to understand contemporaries — including some of the greats — who scorn such measures.

Shaking his head in disbelief, he says: "Richard Petty drives with cowboy boots on. A. J. Foyt wears golf gloves. They would fuse to his hands (in a fiercely blazing car)."

But the slightly-built, fashionably-dressed Scot can't be sombre for long. He has the true Gaelic gift of the gab and a supercharged sense of humor.

His fleeting Victoria visit was to promote a new British Airways charter service from Vancouver to London, tied in with Queen Elizabeth's silver jubilee.

He says he is associated in various promotion and marketing capacities with 16 different companies, including Goodyear Tire and the Ford Motor Company. And he travels 450,000 miles a year ("That's 18 times around the world, more than a British Airways pilot") to hustle their corporate images.

Does he ever lose track of which company he's representing at any one time?

"Not at all, I'm here today on behalf of the Rolex watch people, as you know, gentlemen."

The two British Airways p.r. types from London exchange looks of mock-anguish and threaten not to pay for Jackie's lunch.

Is he a millionaire?

"In yen ... it depends in which country I'm asked."

What car does he drive when he's at home? Answer: A Ford Granada complete with automatic transmission, power steering, the works.

The reporters laugh and one asks what he does with his right hand.

"That's none of your business," flashes the reply. The group explodes.

And so it goes, this lunch with an articulate sportsman who cheated death in the world's most dangerous sport, and who is now capitalizing on his personality.

He says he is worth every penny he receives, and always give his employers — including ABC Television — full value for their money.

As he accelerates out of town on another p.r. stint, no one ho was there disbelieves the claim.

I'll Be at Pierre's Side When Needed: Margaret

NEW YORK (CP) — Margaret Trudeau told the New York Times late Friday she will be "at Pierre's side when he needs me."

She denied earlier reports quoting her as saying that she planned to "abdicate" her role as Prime Minister Trudeau's wife.

"How can a prime minister's wife abdicate?" she is quoted by The Times as telling Judy Klemesrud, who reached her by telephone at Princess Yasmin Aly Khan's Central Park West apartment.

Margaret has been staying at her friend's apartment since she arrived here Tuesday.

She told The Times reporter she would leave for Ottawa today to be at a private dinner the prime minister will give his British counterpart James Callaghan and his wife tonight.

"I'm going to be acting independently," she told The Times.

"I'm just going to be working with my photography, not shaking hands and smiling in crowded halls. I'm tired of that sort of thing."

The 28-year-old Mrs. Trudeau is a photography student.

The prime minister's office announced late Friday that Margaret is expected to be a host at the dinner.

Margaret's remarks to The Times contradicted earlier statements attributed to her by a Toronto and two British newspapers.

Earlier Friday, the Toronto Star quoted her as telling an interviewer that she would not be in Ottawa to attend the dinner for the Callaghans who are on their way back to London after a visit to Washington.

"I'm afraid Pierre will be receiving Mr. Callaghan on his own," The Star quoted her as saying during the interview. "If people want to condemn me, they can condemn me as my own persons ... Don't condemn me as the prime minister's wife because I ... I ... I abdicate."

Later in the day, Margaret was interviewed by two British reporters — Roderick Gilchrist of The Daily Mail and Michael O'Flaherty of The Daily Express

The two British reporters quoted her as saying: "Tell the world I would like to be left alone for a while. OK?"

In her interview with the British reporters, Margaret was quoted as saying that she still loves her husband, that she was abdicating her public role as the prime minister's wife.

"After six years," she was quoted as saying, "I had enough — I abdicate."

Margaret, however, told The Times in the later interview: "What I meant was that I was going to abdicate from attending a public engagement in Nova Scotia later this month."

The two British reporters also quoted her as saying that she was not returning to Ottawa today to greet the British prime minister and his wife.

The Express quoted her as saying: "I'm not saying I'm not living with my husband. I'm not saying I'm not being a mother to my children. But the whole public official life, the whole expectation there was of me, the judgment of my actions and my role — I am just not going to devote my time to that any more.

"It is nothing to do with my personal relationship with my husband, which I think is a unique and fine one. I think we are two loving human beings. Our love may not be conventional but it certainly is for ourselves and something that we depend on. We depend on each other very much. He depends on me to be a free person, and I depend on him for my personal reasons.

"But I don't depend on — and don't need — the role of prime minister's wife."

HANAFI BAND FACES CHARGE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal prosecutors say they will seek felony murder indictments against the small band of Hanafi Moslems who held 134 hostages during a 38-hour siege that terrorized the United States capital.

Four of the gunmen, including their leader, are free without bail. All 12 were charged with armed kidnapping Friday after they laid down their swords and rifles and released unharmed the hostages held at three locations since Wednesday.

Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, 55, the leader, returned to his heavily guarded home after a pre-dawn arraignment that was part of the deal he struck with authorities negotiating the surrender.

"It was only done to save human lives," said U.S. Attorney Earl Silbert.

The District of Columbia's liberal bail law won the release later of three more of the Moslems. The eight others were held in lieu of bail of $50,000 to $75,000.

Despite cuts and rope burns, none of the hostages released at the siege's end was admitted to hospital. But four persons wounded when the violence began Wednesday remained in hospital, including a gunshot victim doctors say may be paralysed from the waist down for life.

Funeral services will be held Monday for Maurice Williams, 24, the radio reporter shot down in the district's city hall. Williams was the lone fatality.

Sword-and machete-carrying Hanafi guards continued to patrol outside the northwest Washington home that a co-religionist, basketball star Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, purchased for the group in 1971.

The theatres stopped showing the film Wednesday at the demand of Abdul Khaalis, who said it insulted his religion.

Also released without bail were three Wheaton, Md., brothers, Abdul Al Qawee, 22, Abdul Rahim, 27, and Abdul Rahman, 37. Before coming Hanafi Moslems, they were known as Sam, Clyde and Phillip Young.

At the same time, the maximum gauranteed income supplement for single persons or married persons whose spouses are not receiving pensions, will rise to $100.62 from the present $99.13.

The maximum total for single persons will be $244.08 a month.

Dangerous

The establishment of an inquiry into allegations of bias on the CBC is dangerous. The probe by the Canadian Radio, Television and Telecommunications Commission was ordered on the say-so of several federal cabinet ministers. They made the wildest allegations, but did not present any evidence.

Their hearts may be in the right place, but sincerity never guaranteed the righteousness of any cause. They aim to preserve the unity of Confederation, which, they claim, is threatened by separatists in the French CBC network. But if methods such as these must be utilized, will what we have left be worth preserving?

The CRTC investigation is very likely to degenerate into counting angels on the head of a pin. Of what does this alleged pro-separatist bias consist? Do French-Canadian news readers raise a quizzical eyebrow and give out with barely suppressed laughter when they announce something from Ottawa? Is Rene Levesque provided with a trick photography halo every time he appears on the tube? Or is it weighting discussions of separatism with serious, intelligent spokesmen and calling in obvious lightweights and bigots for the federalist side?

The trouble is, very few English-Canadians know at all. We have had a French-language CBC television station in B.C. only since last fall, and an FM radio outlet for a few years. But how many English-Canadians tune in to either? And if they did, how is one to define bias? Like beauty, it would seem to be in the eye of the beholder.

The mere technical problems facing the CRTC are immense. In investigating Montreal radio station CFCF's allegedly biased campaign last year against provincial language legislation, CRTC researchers spent 3,000 hours listening to taped programming. And that covered only a two-week period. Investigating an entire network multiplies the problems in geometric progression.

That should read, four networks, because the CRTC has said it will look into both English and French networks, radio and television. It is a near-impossible task. And Prime Minister Trudeau wants a report by July 1.

What if it does find evidence of bias? Will those guilty be rooted out, fired, only to become martyrs to the separatist cause? Is there to be a permanent watchdog office established inside the CBC or CRTC to monitor content to make sure it is politically acceptable?

There are ominous portents. And precedents. Is the CBC to revert to its slavering pro-government line of the Second World War years when opponents of the 1944 conscription plebescite—largely Quebecers—were ignored and the CBC churned out copious amounts of propaganda in favor of it?

The only way this country is going to be held together is by a free and wide-ranging debate, an open and honest debate. One that pulls no punches. Out of the give and take will come, we hope, a national consensus. The shouting may rise to a roar sometimes, and there is certain to be a lot of rubbish spoken on all sides of the question, but the truth should emerge. Trust Canadians in the whole to discard that which is false and spurious.

What This Country Needs . . .

The poor tomato. What used to be a lucious, tasty and juicy fruit has been subjected to the tinkering of the genetic engineers. Scientists at the Davis campus of the University of California, who developed a tough-skinned tomato in 1961 for mechanical handling and long-distance transport, now have produced a square tomato.

UC-82 is its name and researchers are very pleased with her. UC-82 is a squarish oblong which gives a greater yield per acre than the round 1961 model, and better survives the handling and trucking to ketchup and soup factories.

You'd find UC-82 in the stores this summer except that the public, stodgy and conservative tomato-eaters all, prefers round tomatoes. The new square variety will be used entirely in commercial products.

Isn't science wonderful? It developed the thick-skinned tomato (thought of in agricultural terms a production revolution) to withstand more handling with less bruising, then UC-82 which is more convenient for mechanical pickers and conveyer belts and trucks.

Agricultural scientists also developed the ethylene gassing method of prematurely ripening tomatoes. The fruit is picked when still green, just as a bit of pink starts to show, and packed and stored in warehouses. Ethylene gas is introduced — a gas which tomatoes naturally produce, but in their own sweet time ripening on the vine. So the tomatoes turn red, but haven't really ripened.

With the thorny problems of the pickers and packers solved, perhaps now agricultural scientists can turn their attention to the last remaining unsolved challenge — to produce a commercial tomato that tastes like a tomato should, sweet, ripe and juicy, without a skin that requires hammer and chisel.

A Bird In Tune Down The Silent Shaft

Prior to the dinner break at last Tuesday's sitting of the legislature Liberal leader Gordon Gibson asked Premier Bennett if he had any personal knowledge of secret talks between mining industry representatives and the provincial government.

The premier circumvented the question like a coal miner avoiding the shaft where his canary died.

Following the gustatory delights of the evening meal, Gibson read from some fascinating documents relating to northeastern coal development which almost certainly produced sharp stabs of heartburn among government MLAs who possess that organ.

First came a letter from Deputy Mines Minister James Fyles to Garnet Page, managing director of the Coal Association of Canada. In the letter Fyles waxed enthusiastic about a direction from the "coal cabinet committee" to establish an industry government working group to discuss issues related to coal policy formation.

Further perusal of the letter shows the industry-government working group would be composed of four members from the coal industry, chosen jointly by the coal association and the B.C. mining association, plus three or four senior government officials.

The second last paragraph is worth quoting in full: "The first task of the group will be to study proposed revisions that the government is considering with respect to the tenure of Crown coal lands in the province. Other issues will be considered later and it may be that this group can develop into some sort of permanent advisory council."

Following this minor revelation, the wily member from Vancouver Capilano somehow acquired the minutes from the Feb. 7 meeting referred to in the letter and read excerpts to the house. He claims the matter of coal royalties was discussed at the meeting, with seven members of the coal industry in attendance.

A paragraph purportedly from the minutes which Gibson read is also worth noting: "Mr. Phillips (Economic Development Minister Don Phillips) remarked that justice must appear to be done with respect to a fair royalty, and asked whether the public accepts the present royalty. This poses a problem for both government and industry. During the ensuing discussion it was agreed that this problem seems to be lessening, but that both government and industry should continue their public education efforts in this regard to relate royalties properly to the total benefits of a healthy and viable coal industry to the people of the province."

During the meeting Phillips, according to Gibson, asked whether there were any thoughts about the industry forming a coal marketing board. Apparently industry representatives declined to proceed with the discussion on the grounds it might be related to limiting competition or establishing price.

Now this appears to be quite a rich vein the Liberal leader has discovered in the dark tunnels of government planning. Gibson is not complaining that government consults industry in planning a scheme the magnitude of northeastern coal development. He is complaining about the secrecy involved. More than $3 million worth of studies on northeastern coal development have been undertaken and the best public information to date comes from the leader of an opposition party.

If the government is working so closely with industry then why isn't it consulting the miners' union too? Why isn't the public included in a debate that will eventually cost taxpayers hundreds of million of dollars if the Socreds have their way?

No adequate answers are forthcoming from the provincial government. Discrepancies between what is said and what is written make for more suspicion. In the letter to Page, Fyles writes that various policy issues concerning coal ". . . are now in the final stages of decision."

But the premier told the house Tuesday night that while studies continue, "It'll be a long time before they will be making positive decisions on the research that's collected by the professional staff."

James Fyles, meet Bill Bennett.

And then there is the Fyles allusion to setting up "some sort of permanent advisory council" with representatives of industry. What is a civil servant doing encouraging this kind of liasion tantamount to a lobby?

Such a council of industry and government might have validity, providing its formation was done under the public eye with carefully spelled out prerogatives. But dangers exist here, especially when such a group is formed covertly, that the committee will become a policy forum to which government reacts.

Don't forget Gibson's allusions to Phillips' queries concerning a coal marketing board and his remark about the appearance of justice in coal royalties.

There is an evil smell of corporatism in these documents revealed by the Liberal leader, a sweaty smell of coziness between government and industry not in the interests of B.C.

Yet ironies within ironies exist in this company province. Even Gibson, who has done an admirable job in questioning the secrecy surrounding the government's major economic initiative, refused to reveal names of industry figures at the clandestine meeting. He referred to them as "A, B, C, D, E, F, and G" because they were private persons who had no reason to think they would be quoted.

Did Phillips or Fyles have any reason to think they would be quoted either? Come, come Gordon Gibson. If you're going to lay your cards on the table don't keep seven aces up your sleeve.

We're talking about $1 billion in taxpayers' money here. It's about time everybody came clean before all the canaries expire from poison gas—G.R.O.

Confederation

The U.S. has always taken a stable Canada for granted so that the idea of instability comes as a shock. The U.S. knows from its own history that Confederation is a less stable form of government than federation. It was the threat of secession by the southern states that caused the Civil War.

The trend in the past has been for the emergence of larger nations covering bigger areas, recently there has been a tendency to revert to secession, breaking up larger nations, some successful, some not, Biafra, Bangladesh, Cyprus, Ireland.

Independence for Quebec would have profound repercussions on the security of the United States. Just as the U.S. could not allow a hostile nation to get a foothold in Alaska so they could not allow a hostile, or even possibly hostile, nation to develop in Quebec. The Cuban missile crisis of 1962 shows how they would react.

The prime minister has often stated that the present capitalist system does not work and that he wishes to change it. The break up of Canadian Confederation would certainly result in changes, so that his desire to change the capitalist system could result in the break up of Canadian confederation as means to that end. — H. S. Thuillier, 2424 Beach Drive.

Stagnating Economy

A recent article in the Times outlined current unemployment problems at Yarrows Shipyard. It is difficult to rationalize the Victoria Labor Council's attitude in thinking that Ottawa should bail them out by allocating federal shipbuilding orders here when the unions themselves are primarily responsible for pricing our yards out of this very competitive market. Not only have they pushed wages on the west coast to $9.60 per hour compared with $5.50 in Ontario, but through restrictive work practices set up between the various unions in the yard have effectively throttled any hope of Yarrows being competitive on a productivity basis.

Where is the percentage of being the highest paid shipyard workers in the world if only 90 out of a normal complement of 900 men have full employment?

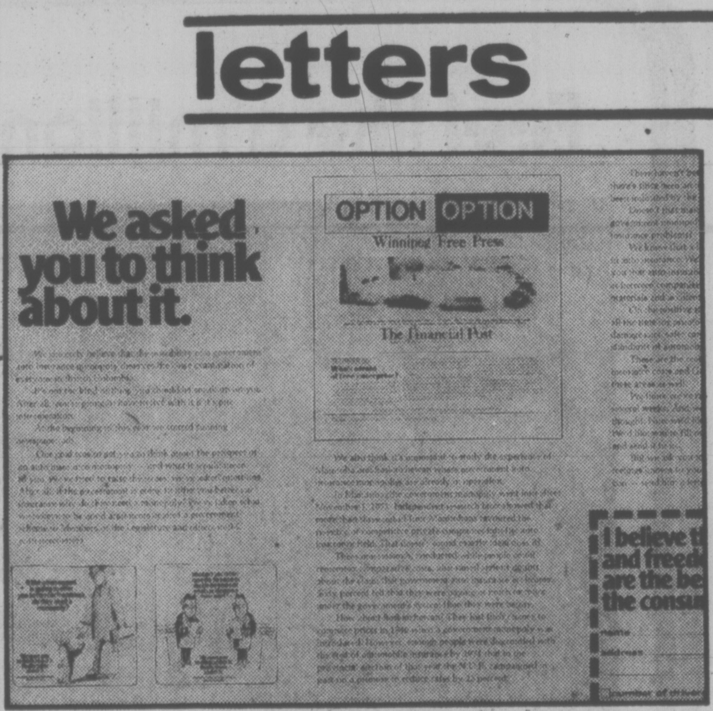
The same sort of short-sighted thinking is evident with the IWA now demanding a 30 per cent increase in the forestry industry, along with a guaranteed minimum annual wage. As labor in B.C. becomes more and more outrageously expensive, industry cannot be expected to carry workers over slack periods. Inevitably longer lay-offs and higher unemployment will result. It is high time the unions started developing a realistic perspective and some social conscience before we all go down the drain.

On its part the federal government must begin to accept that industry's capital requirements for equipment replacement and growth expansion should average about 25 per cent of gross national expenditures. Measures which restrict the flow of such funds such as excessive capital gains tax, double and triple taxation on the same earnings, and higher labor costs can lead only to a stagnating economy. — E.T.T., Victoria.

Thoughtfulness

With increasing and sickening frequency we now hear of the sudden deaths (mostly as a result of traffic accidents) of young healthy people. One cannot but feel deep sympathy and pity for the parents and other members of the family, and for friends, when these tragedies occur. However, there are other parents who also deserve our sympathy. These are the ones who have in their family a young person whose life is slowly but surely ebbing away while awaiting transplant of some healthy young vital organ. There are no doubt many who would gladly donate, but whose organs are too old to be of any use.

Is it too much to ask that healthy young men and women, who so constantly endanger their lives, would make it clear to their families that their organs may be made available in the event of their early death? And might it not perhaps give some comfort to a sorrowing family to know that hope, and perhaps life, had been given to another family by this thoughtfulness? — G. Thorn, 979 Walena Avenue.



We asked you to think about it.

Advocacy Ads

For some months now, we have been treated to hardsell propaganda advertising on television. Well before the last provincial election was even announced, blatant propaganda was being beamed at us from stations just over the border, sponsored as I remember by some sort of union of insurance companies. Their motive is too obvious to mention. The ads were of the "I-don't - want - to - live-in-a-socialist-society" type. Lately there has been a more innocent version, slightly more subtle (or more insidious, depending upon your side of the fence) silkily entreats us: "Let's free enterprise!" (I didn't know it needed it). As if the alternative were total destruction of our country as well as our way of life! Democracy and free enterprise are not synonymous, you know.

I don't like being propagandized. No doubt objections to this dangerous tactic will be met with screams of self-righteous indignation and accusations of attempts to muzzle free speech. Why is it that we feel justified in depriving a criminal of his right to personal freedom, but invariably allow anyone to say anything without recognizing that there is such a thing as the abuse of free speech?

An individual forfeits a right by a breach of moral self-restraint — and propaganda advertising is such a breach. (by their very violence, for example, terrorists forfeit their right to be considered, even though the issues may be in fact of a moral nature.)

It is interesting to note that certain groups, such as propagandists or traders in pornography, who shout very loudly about "rights," stand to profit in large measure when their "rights" are recognized. — Judith Burkett, 42 San Jose Avenue.

Ad Man's Special

It is with horror that I read of the journey to be taken by the Royal Hudson this spring.

Surely it is in the worst possible taste to send wax museum figures (ugh!) along with a well-executed exhibit on steam, built by the provincial museum.

I cannot believe that this prestigious organization, which is rapidly gaining the reputation of being the best museum in Canada, agrees to this embarrassing travesty of contemporary exhibits.

I now feel obliged to write to my friends in the U.S. to apologize in advance for this "ad man's special" coming their way.

Surely we have matured since that last embarrassment, the centennial caravan?—Horrified.

Staunch Patriots

I read with great interest your two editorials Policies, Not Rationalizations and Another Energy Warning.

Men like Mel Hurtig, Walter Gordon, Eric Kierans and others have been travelling around the country preaching the very things you mention such as the sale of our natural resources and industries to Americans, not with U.S. funds but with Canadian money supplied by our chartered banks.

Yet our leaders do not seem to be in the least worried. The legislation inroduced by the government to govern foreign takeovers is so ineffective I at times wonder if it was not just a smokescreen. The chartered banks are very much to blame and yet they are allowed to go on this very unhappy course for our national future without any correction or even direction from our government.

Of course, if the Conservatives form the next government there will be no change in such policies. In fact, Joe Clark in a weak moment, told an audience that his party would dismantle PetroCan which is, at least, a pretence by the Liberals to establish a national oil company although they are restricting themselves to oil exploration and not an integrated industry.

I wrote and told Donald Macdonald, who was then minister of energy, that the Syncrude deal was the greatest sell-out of Canada since the CPR. Yet nothing is done to listen to staunch patriots like Hurtig, Gordon, Kierans, Peter Newman and others who have been blasting our giveaways and the average Canadian does not appear to be in the least interested. At times I despair.—M. P. B. Wrixon, 301-1701 Cedar Hill X Road.

Impart Wisdom

It has apparently never occurred to Education Minister Pat McGeer to correct vandalism and arson in the most straightforward and adequate way — listen and give validity to those protests of the desperate children who commit those acts by drastically changing the stance and thrust of the educational system. Other solutions, such as proposed, will be ineffective because the education offerred is basically unsuited and will result only in more costly but also futile attempts to solve the problems that arise.

An entirely new departure in the matter of philosophy of education is sorely needed but undoubtedly must await the installation of a new minister.

From the essay The Rythm of Education by Alfred North Whitehead, famed British mathematician, philosopher and educator, we note the following truisms which especially apply to B.C. education today: "The facing of ideals is sad evidence of the defeat of human endeavor. In the schools of antiquity they aspired to impart wisdom, in modern schools our humbler aim is to teach subjects. The drop from the divine wisdom, which was the goal of the ancients to textbook knowledge of subjects, which is achieved by modernists, marks and educational failure sustained through the ages."

Most of the forces inherent in today's education in B.C. impinge so badly on the children that are victims of it, and on some of the teachers and officials, that it is no wonder that a lady vice-principal of a Burnaby high school called for a cessation of schooling for two years to find out where the schools were at and where they were going.

Volunteers Needed

We wonder if there might be a few of your readers with time on their hands who would be willing to volunteer, either occasionally or regularly, to take a blind person for a walk, or to shop, or drive to a doctor's office to keep an appointment. Perhaps just out for a drive in nice weather for a breath of fresh air. Or there might be someone who likes reading who will share his ability with someone who no longer can?

Role Twist In Strike

By FRED CLEVERLY
Winnipeg Free Press

The daily appearance of 60 Winnipeg policemen last week and this to drag members of a small Canadian Union, their wives and children from the driveway of the Griffin Steel Foundaries, in order to let new employees in, is a serious potential threat to organized labor in Manitoba, and to the government of Premier Edward Schreyer, which so far at least has enjoyed the support of the labor force.

Each morning, the police waded in, and working in twos and threes, managed to separate the workers who were lying, arms and legs linked, across the driveway. Those strikers were placed in police vans, driven to the nearest station, and once identified were released.

The action began last Monday, and the released strikers staged replays each day for the rest of the week and were back again Friday morning. No charges have been laid, and it is unlikely that Manitoba Attorney-General Howard Pawley will become involved in a situation which would see a New Democratic government charge members of a union who are trying, in their words, to prevent strikebreaking.

The action, which follows a five-month strike at the 200 employee company which turns out rail wheels for both Canadian railways, could be equally embarrassing for the Canadian Labor Congress and the Manitoba Federation of Labor.

Because the union involved, the Canadian Association of Industrial, Mechanical and Allied Workers, chose not to affiliate with the CLC (primarily because it feared being taken over by an international group) organized labor in Manitoba has taken a hands-off position.

But by doing so, organized labor appears to be in the position of supporting strikebreaking, because while police can daily remove the relatively small number of strikers now involved, they would be faced with a much different situation if an organization such as the Manitoba Federation of Labor decided to put some muscle in the picket line.

Even the present ritual, if it is continued, could cause some irritation once police overtime bills start pouring in. The Winnipeg city council will likely have a short fuse when it comes to paying the daily bills for 60 constables required at the plant each morning.

The daily appearance of police isn't doing the image of union solidarity any good at all.

Curiously, the issue at stake is not money, but what is termed "compulsory overtime." The company has been free of any labor trouble during the past 17 years. Overtime, compulsory or voluntary, was not too great an issue when the company first began, because most of its employees were young and the extra money was welcome.

Winnipeg police remove woman picketer at foundry

But as the years passed, homes were paid off, and free time became more valuable than the highly-taxed overtime.

Griffin's office manager, Bruce Whittam, says the workers "pulled the plug" nearly two years ago by flatly refusing to work overtime. The company got rough, and began taking disciplinary action.

The union took the matter to court, and the court ruled that the union contract must be interpreted that all overtime work be voluntary. The company doesn't entirely agree with this decision, and as a result wanted in 1976 a stronger management rights clause, with some compulsory overtime written into the agreement.

Possibly as a lever to move negotiations forward, the company discovered itself faced with widespread refusal to work overtime. Al Pitt, the national chairman of the union, said the refusal was taken on an individual basis, but "unfortunately, it got carried away when people got fired and suspended."

The union, of course, wants the company to hire more employees to avoid the compulsory overtime, and Mr. Pitt claims the overtime is an expense-saving measure by the company because it frees it from fringe benefits for the extra men.

Two weeks ago Griffin advertised its working conditions, invited strikers (and others) to apply for jobs. Few Winnipeggers expected the relatively small union to take the action it did.

By Wednesday, the plant had 25 workers turning out 60 wheels a day. While this is less than 10 per cent of the normal, 700 wheels-a-day production, the company is optimistic that it will win the fight.

The most ironic thing about the Griffin dispute is that the company has taken, while not admitting it, close to a classic strikebreaking position, and in doing so is getting the backing of organized labor in Manitoba and the labor-oriented provincial government.

It would appear that national, and international affiliation in labor circles has a higher priority than any meaningful move to stop strikebreaking.

Bennett to Blame For House Laxity

"I must say that the comments I get from the public regarding our legislature show that they don't have very much confidence in a lot of the members of this legislature in the way they've conducted themselves so far. I don't think they particularly want them to have a direct say in policy. I think it's something that's going to have to be earned." —
Premier William Bennett,
Friday, March 4, 1977

By FRANCES RUSSELL
The Sun

Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau sparked a storm of controversy when he once remarked that MPs were "nobodies." But at least the prime minister restricted that characterization to members once they had left Parliament Hill.

Premier Bennett believes members are nobodies in their legislative role, a role he says the public doesn't want them to have unless they "earn" it.

Indeed. Who then is to formulate government policy? Surely Mr. Bennett hasn't forgotten that he, too, is an MLA. That his cabinet ministers are MLAs. That, in fact, under the parliamentary system government is merely the largest group of MLAs in a legislature.

When Mr. Bennett's views were dropped calmly into the middle of a debate on his estimates Friday morning, the opposition reacted with stunned shock.

As far as Liberal leader Gordon Gibson was concerned, it was the most anti-democratic sentiment ever expressed in a parliament or legislature. To NDP house leader William King, it revealed the premier's "autocratic" tendencies.

Are we indeed seeing the dawning of the age of the imperial premier? Or are we merely finding out that Mr. Bennett neither likes nor understands the purposes of parliament?

The evidence indicates both.

Mr. Bennett is not a legislature man. His dislike of it appears to be a mixture of contempt and fear. Contempt because the premier brings the businessman's interpretation to politics and little else. The business mentality focuses on efficiency and quick decisions. This is an aspect of politics, but only one of many. Other aspects, at least in a democracy, involve the expression of dissent, the right to hold government accountable for its actions, the right to know what the government is doing and why. As opposition leader, the premier used all these avenues to embarrass the former NDP administration. Now that he is in power, he no longer appears to see their value.

BENNETT
. . . edgy

And this points to the premier's fear of the house. Opposition leader David Barrett has long viewed the media's praise of Mr. Bennett's growth as a debater and orator with considerable cynicism. The premier, Mr. Barrett says, flowers best in a protected atmosphere, giving his best performances before tame audiences: $100 a plate Socred fund-raising banquets, conventions of the faithful and so on. The premier avoids speaking tours and town hall meetings where a few of his adversaries might show up and discomfort him.

While Mr. Barrett's view is somewhat overdrawn (Mr. Bennett shouted down his share of hecklers on the 1975 campaign trail) it is true that dissent and heckling upset Mr. Bennett faster and more visibly than they do most other politicians. He cannot relax on the stump. He is up-tight and obviously on edge. The stump's uncertainties and unfriendliness are mirrored in the legislature. And so is the premier's edginess.

Mr. Bennett's contempt for and fear of the house would be serious enough if they stopped at remarks about MLAs "earning" the right to have a say in policy. But the premier's dislike of the house is shown in a growing malaise of the entire legislative process.

Just two facts are sufficient illustration. The legislature has been sitting since Jan. 13, and nearly two months later, not a single significant piece of legislation has come forward and not a single committee has been called.

There is speculation now that departments are giving up attempting to get legislation through the Socred cabinet and caucus because of continual nit-picking on the smallest points. Even legislation that died on the order paper last session is having trouble getting through.

In the same speech where the premier tossed aside the significance of the MLA as an elected representative of the people, Mr. Bennett indicated members may have their pay cut because they aren't busy enough. Perhaps B.C.'s MLAs, at $24,000 a year, are too highly paid. But it is a cynical move by a premier to refuse to bring even a modest program of work before the house, force it to degenerate into futile partisanship, and then call for less work, shorter and shorter sessions and, of course, less chance for the opposition to probe and question the activities of government.

The government's emerging political ideology is that of 18th-century classic liberalism: "That government governs best which governs least."

It is strange indeed that such libertarian views would accompany such contempt toward the legislature which embodies the peoples' right to examine the activities of government.

Carter Opens Up Minefield

By HELLA PICK
Manchester Guardian

President Carter is now trying to defuse the human rights debate between the United States and the Soviet Union by emphasizing his concern for human rights the world over and singling out General Amin as being even more brutal than the Russians. Nevertheless, the "hullabaloo" — as the Kremlin has characterized the debate President Carter has fuelled — may have deep repercussions within the Eastern bloc, according to some observers in the West.

They consider that the contagion of dissent could spread and pose a threat to the Soviet Union's control over the Warsaw Pact countries, and even cause unrest within Russia itself. Pravda itself acknowledged recently that "we have some difficulties and we know them better than our enemies do." But the newspaper added: "We shall overcome."

Soviet self-assurance may not be that great. The quarrels within the Western European Communist parties have sharpened over the human rights issue; and the Kremlin's influence over them continues to decline.

The Soviet Union has the military power to intervene against any possible uprising among its Eastern bloc allies but this is the last action it would wish to take. Another Prague Spring would certainly end detente and risk a new Cold War.

The Soviet reaction to President Carter's stand raises several questions about the new U.S. Administration's strategy. Is Washington correct in ditching Dr. Kissinger's "linkage" theory — that East-West issues can be neatly compartmentalized — and in assuming that Russian interest in arms control agreements and expanded trade with the West will reveal the Kremlin's protest over the human rights issue as mere posturing?

Is the United States wise to encourage dissent in the Communist countries when it has neither the power nor the political will to help the dissidents?

And how much does the Kremlin fear that President Carter's letter to Professor Sakharov, and the widespread reporting of the Charter 77 manifesto in Czechoslovakia, will spark a serious challenge to Soviet authority within the Eastern bloc?

Political analysts in the West are deeply divided in their interpretations of Soviet reactions to the human rights debate. There is no doubt at all about the steadily rising tone of Soviet resentment against what it chooses to interpret as interference in the internal affairs of the socialist countries.

Yet the Americans know well enough that the Soviet anger over the human rights issue could merely be a smokescreen for the genuine difficulties facing the arms negotiations. SALT remains bedevilled by the unresolved problem over the Cruise missile, a new weapon which challenges existing assumptions about the strategic balance.

The Vienna negotiations for force reductions in Central Europe have been in deadlock since they began more than three years ago, and there were no hints of a breakthrough when the human rights issue began to sour Soviet-American relations.

But the Soviet Union shares American concern to prevent the spread of nuclear technology, and continues to co-operate in the search for adequate safeguards. The Soviet Union has also spoken, in Geneva last week, of its interest in a test ban agreement, even if it were to include on-site inspection — a procedure which has long been anathema to the Russians.

The debate in the Kremlin concerns both the Soviet Union's worries over military security and also the extension of its range of influence and the promotion of world revolution. There is the unresolved question of whether the Soviet Union can better safeguard itself by negotiating arms limitation agreements than by seeking to catch up with the United States on Cruise missiles and other military technology.

Where does the truth lie? Western observers do not know. Mr. Carter's commitment to morality in international affairs may be very appealing, but it has created new minefields for all concerned.

A Hutton's Vireo Leads to Old Paths

You never know where a little research will lead. For example, here's what happened when I started tracking down the Hutton of Hutton's Vireo.

It all began when I saw a Hutton's Vireo in Thetis Park last week. Certainly not an earth-shattering event I'll admit, but it was something special for me; it was only the second time in nearly seven years that I'd managed to get a good look at one of these elusive little chaps. Not only that, it was such a good look that I'm sure I'll know a Hutton's Vireo the next time I meet one.

But it wasn't the seeing that got my research going; it was that name, Hutton. Who in the world was Hutton? How did a name like that ever get hung on a tiny grey-green bird which sports a ridiculous pair of eye-rings, or part rings, eye rings that suggest it's wearing spectacles. Spectacled Vireo maybe; but Hutton's? Well, when I got home I started digging and here is what my spade uncovered:

First, I got waylaid by a Greek — Aristotle by name, who, like most Greeks, had a word for everything. As near as I can figure Aristotle got into the act when, in 1544, an English naturalist by the name of William Turner published a book he succinctly titled "A Short and Succinct History of the Principle Birds Noticed by Pliney and Aristotle." The book, originally written in Latin — the language of scholars in those days — and translated into English in 1905 by a chap called Evans, quoted Aristotle to the effect that; "The vireo, which is entirely green, is singled out as easy to be caught, and clever for the business of life, but flies badly and its color is unpleasing."

Aristotle must turn over in his grave every time he hears that quotation. The strangulation of his original Greek must be enough to have him rise in wrath and strike down the perpetrators of such blasphemy. But, quite apart from the convoluted syntax, the quotation presents another problem: unless Aristotle got around a lot more than history lets on, he never saw a vireo — and probably never heard of one either.

For that matter, neither did Turner. Evans may have, but even that is doubtful because vireos are birds of the New World, North and South America. There may be nearly 40 different kinds of the little fellows, but they're all birds of this side of the Atlantic unknown to Old World naturalists of Turner's time.

So, how come Aristotle's vireo?

I thought you'd never ask.

Well, if there is an explanation it lies in the translation of Aristotle's words. There is no way now of knowing what kind of bird the great natural philosopher had in mind when he coined those immortal phrases "clever for the business of life" and "color is unpleasing" ascribed to him by Turner and Evans because in moving from Greek through Latin to English something got lost along the way.

Whatever the reason, a common little European bird — the Greenfinch — somehow enters the picture to become the vireo of which Aristotle wrote, at least that's what scholars now seem to believe. But even there, trouble rears its ugly head. Remember Aristotle has his vireo "entirely green"; a fairly acceptable description for a Greenfinch if you ignore its two most conspicuous field marks, those bright yellow patches, one on each wing, that show prominently when the bird flies.

One can only conclude that Aristotle was a bit off-color the day he described his so-called vireo, or maybe it was simply a short-circuit in the Greek/Latin/English line.

Quite aside from the Aristotle/Turner/Evans triangle, the word vireo has gained an acceptable place in the English language of today, being an adaptation of the Latin "virese", "to be green", an appropriate description of the vireo family.

But what about Hutton? Wasn't that the object of this little exercise?

Well, strangely, Hutton doesn't leave much of a shadow across the face of ornithological history. This much we know. His full name — or what we have of it — was William Hutton. He lived for a time — about the middle of the last century — in Washington D.C., where he collected birds for the United States National Museum. He was somewhere in California in 1848 when he collected a specimen of the bird that now bears his name.

Hutton wasn't presumptuous. He didn't name the bird for himself; that was left to John Cassin, of Cassin's Finch and Cassin's Auklet fame — but that's another story for another time.

Suffice it now to say that I'll never hear another Hutton's Vireo without thinking of Turner, and Evans, and the great philosopher of Athens.

Chemical Plant Okayed

CALGARY (CP) — Preliminary approval for the construction of a $225-million petrochemical plant in Alberta has been granted by the provincial energy resources conservation board.

At the same time, the board decided to hold in abeyance a second application for another plant, arguing that Alberta has enough natural resources to supply only one plant.

A consortium comprised of the Alberta Energy Company, Hudson Bay Oil and Gas Ltd., Mitsubishi Petrochemical Co. Ltd., and Mitsubishi Corp. was given an industrial development permit to build the plant near Fort Saskatchewan, about 20 miles northeast of Edmonton.

The Alberta Energy Company is 50-per-cent owned by the Alberta government and has more than 50,000 private shareholders in the province.

Final approval of the proposal must be made by the cabinet.

The consortium, called Petrochemicals Alberta Project (PetAlta), plans to build the plant near Fort Saskatchewan, but the cabinet could insist it be built elsewhere.

Cabinet approval would give PetAlta the right to use 17.2 million barrels of pentanes plus a year over a 20-year period in the production of benzene and other byproducts for use in Canada and the United States.

Pentanes plus are liquid derivatives of natural gas and are produced largely in the Edmonton area. Benzene is used in the production of plastics, nylon fibres, detergents, adhesives used in plywood production and other petrochemical products.

A similar proposal by a consortium consisting of Alberta Gas Trunk Line Ltd., Dow Chemical of Canada Ltd., and Alberta Gas Chemicals Ltd. sought permission for a plant in the same area.

The board said Alberta cannot produce enough pentanes plus to feed two benzene plants and concluded that Canadian, U.S. and Japanese markets could absorb petrochemical products from only one of the plants.

Anglicans publish book on energy issues

Will Canadians really freeze in the dark without the Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline? Are nuclear and solar energy equally viable alternatives to fossil fuels? Do government and industry keep the public properly informed?

Can we prevent the poisoning of water, the obliteration of forests and the exploitation of native people?

A new book, published last week by the Anglican Book Centre, Toronto, seeks to answer these questions and to suggest constructive alternatives.

Moratorium — Justice, Energy, the North and the Native People, was written by Hugh and Kamel McCullum and John Olthuis.

The McCullums, authors of the best-selling book This Land Is Not For Sale, are known for their knowledge of northern Canada and their concern for native people.

Olthuis, lawyer and researcher for the new book, appeared before the National Energy Board hearings on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline.

The book's preface was written by Bruce Willson, former president of Canadian Bechtel Company Limited and Union Gas Company Limited, now chairman of the Committee for an Independent Canada.

In it he says that the book is written in such a way that the average citizen can easily understand the complexities of the issues.

"This is good," says Willson, "because the issues are much too important to be left to the experts."

Wonder topic of Unitarian

Every person is a philosopher to the degree of his or her wonder about that which is. Wonder is the prelude to knowledge, to thinking itself. It is the beginning of adventure, the free-fall plunge into the universe.

These statements will be discussed by Rev. Stanley Stefancic, minister of East Shore Unitarian Church, Bellevue, Wash., at the 10:30 a.m. Sunday service at the Unitarian Church of Victoria, 106 Superior. His topic: Wonder, The Leap Into the Universe of Is.

Dream fulfilled

Preacher starts healing service

Follows

A ministry of prayer for inner healing was begun this week by Rev. Ted Follows, former minister of Elk Lake Community Baptist Church and now a member of the team ministry at the Church of the Way which meets in the Student Union Building at the University of Victoria.

Follows has opened an office at 3440 Douglas Street opposite Town and Country shopping centre under the name Inner Healing Service.

The service is offered without charge, Follows said this week, and is for the benefit of Christians of all denominations as well as non-Christians. Support will come from interested persons, he said. He will also be available for preaching and for teaching engagements on the subject of inner healing.

The opening of the office is a step nearer to fulfilling a dream for Follows.

He offers himself "as one who believes that God loves people and is wanting to come into their lives to give them guidance and strength to overcome their problems and find their way back to inner and outer health and peace."

"I have seen prayer bring relief to people suffering from alcoholism, colitis, migraines, insomnia, severe anxiety and compulsive behavior. The cure is sometimes dramatic but it is often not quick and easy since it demands a recognition by the sufferer that he or she is part of the cause of the problem and must sincerely desire to be free and walk in the sight of God."

"This is the reason why people who already have some faith in God usually find the cure for their problems more easily than those who have no faith in God or anyone else," he said.

Follows shares a dream with many other Christians in Victoria, of establishing a healing home in the midst of a Christian community where a person can stay for an extended period in an atmosphere of love and prayer so that the cure is quicker and more complete.

The service offered will be closely associated with the Better Way Counselling Centre being developed by Rainbow Productions to complement its radio and TV outreach with a telephone hotline and follow-up service. Follows can be reached at 388-4838.

City man to serve in Africa

Mark Grunewald of Victoria's Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will spend two years in Johannesburg, South Africa, on a mission for his church.

Grunewald, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Grunewald, 3697 Quadra, will enter the language training mission at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah, this week for instruction in the Afrikaans language.

He will leave for South Africa in May. While on his mission he will be supported by his own savings with help from his family.

He'll complain to the media

TORONTO (CP) — Harold Fishleigh, Toronto businessman and member of the United Church, has asked people in all parts of North America to mail him clippings of newspaper stories they find offensive or copies of profane quotations heard on radio or television.

He says he will send complaints to editors or station managers responsible.

Brazil leads mission list

TORONTO (CP) — Brazil continues to receive the largest number of Protestant missionaries of any country in the world, says the Missions Advanced Research and Communication Centre.

Brazil has 2,068 missionaries, followed by Japan with 1,545 and Mexico with 1,209.

Church will observe Commonwealth Day

A service to mark Commonwealth Day — next Monday — will be held at 11 a.m. Sunday in Centennial United Church.

Guest speaker Dr. R. H. Roy, professor of military history and strategic studies at the University of Victoria, has chosen as his subject From Empire to the Commonwealth of Nations.

Roy's fifth book, a biography of Maj.-Gen. George Pearkes, will be published in June.

Commonwealth Day will henceforth be celbrated on the second Monday in March following a meeting of Commonwealth officials in Canberra, Australia, last May. It was agreed there that all Commonwealth countries would observe that day.

Roy is a graduate of the University of British Columbia. He earned his PhD at the University of Washington.

The Victoria and Vancouver Island branch of the Royal Commonwealth Society and the Monarchist League will parade at the Sunday service.

Mixed poetry bag for St. Patrick's

In a departure from its customary Thursday evening chamber programming, the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria will present theatrical personalities Sylvia Hatchman and Anthony Jenkins in an evening of contemporary religious poetry at 8 p.m. on St. Patrick's Day.

Drawing on the works of 18 poets from 12 countries, the actors' readings will range from Nigeria's neo-traditional Catholicism through Afro-American pragmatism to Japanese nihilism.

Two of the major works to be read are Gael Turnbull's Lindisfarne and John Montague's From a New Siege.

Sylvia Hatchman, a newcomer to Victoria, was one of the founding members of Theatre Calgary. She is appearing on local television in readings from a play by Victoria playwright Joan Mason-Hurley on the writitngs of Jane Austen.

Anthony Jenkins, a well-known Victoria actor, is an associate professor and director of the English honors program at the University of Victoria.

Church council tried hard

Missile base battle one of many

Attempts by the Greater Victoria Council of Churches to halt the development of the Trident missile base at Bangor, Wash., have failed, but not from lack of trying, Rev. Dr. A. E. King told the recent annual meeting of the council.

But King, retiring president of the council, spoke of services pursued by members of the body while, at the same time, respecting differences in the theological traditions.

Among these, he said, were services to the handicapped, the poor and the disinherited, at home and abroad.

"There is also our concern for the right use of our resources, our environment and the peaceful use of atomic energy. We deplore the extension of the arms race and the widening gap between rich and poor.

"We believe in the necessity of reaching a just solution of the native land claims and equal opportunities for all to find a place of service and fulfillment in society.

"We are concerned about the breakdown of moral standards which is having a disastrous effect on the family and on society. To this end, we have not only deplored the increase in pornography and violence, we have supported the B.C. Conference on the Family and are in the process of establishing a counselling service in co-operation with the RCMP and the local police in the Greater Victoria area.

"This is in addition to the Greater Victoria Citizens' Counselling Centre, which we gave leadership in establishing eight years ago and now is successfully operating on its own. We have also participated in many group discussions and seminars on such social issues as penal reform, juvenile delinquency, preparation for retirement and the visitation of the sick and lonely in hospital and nursing homes."

King said one of the encouraging developments in which the council had a part was the organization of the Association of Christian Councils of B.C. and the Yukon. This would lead to greater cooperation among churches associated with ministerial groups and pastors' fellowships, he said, in communities in and beyond the metropolitan area, and involve congregations not previously associated with church councils.

The council took part in a drive to aid earthquake victims in Guatemala, encouraged the support of the agricultural program in Vietnam and the rehabilitation of prostitutes in Saigon.

The inter-faith committee, King said, provided activities and programs to help those of different faiths to understand one another.

The graduates, who attended the meeting with Canon Thomas Bailey, lay school director, were Charles Deighton, Mr. and Mrs. Alan Ford, Byron Hosking, Mrs. Barbara Parkinson and Mrs. Nancy Tyrwhitt-Drake.

New council president is Rev. Alfred Johnson, Lutheran Church of the Cross. Vice-president is Canon Hilary Butler, program director of the Anglican Synod. Mrs. Margaret Ranneris is secretary and Frank Blackwell, treasurer. Both are United Church members.

ANOTHER BLOW FOR DART MAN

VANCOUVER (CP)— Karl Eha blew into Edmonton Thursdayy, just in time to feel the hot wind of the federal justice department on his neck

Eha went to the Alberta capital to get back the money he'd given Pat Shawn, of B'Wana Corp., Anaheim, Calif,.., for exclusive Canada-wide rights to distribute California-made blowguns.

The trip was necessary because the justice department had decreed that possession of blowguns was illegal in Canada.

By then, Shawn and his five-member travelling blowgun show, had moved on from the Vancouver Boat Show to the Edmonton Boat, Trailer and Sport show.

When Eha reached Edmonton, however, Shawn had been barred by police from performing a second night at the show and was told to get his banned blowguns out of Canada before they were confiscated.

"These guys are broke," Eha said in a telephone interview Friday. "And the only chance they've got is to get down to Cincinnati, Ohio, where their next show is on next week."

So Eha paid their bus fares. Eha, who said he really can't understand why blowguns have been banned, said he couldn't see the group stuck.

He said he figured his best chance to get his money back is to prop the group up long enough for it to hit it big at the Cincinnati show.

He said he has a verbal deal that says Shawn will pay him off when the money starts rolling in.

Delays Criticized

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Wildlife Federation Friday criticized the federal fisheries department for deferring decision on a two-licence plan for west coast salmon fishermen.

The federation said in a telegram to Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc that it was shocked and dismayed at his decision to ignore the recommendations of his staff for the plan, which, the federation said, is needed if chinook and coho stock are to be maintained.

It said if LeBlanc cannot act immediately on reasonable management proposals, then the federation must take up the proposal put forward by the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union, and demand a closure of all commercial fishing in the Strait of Georgia.

Seiners Strike It Right for Roe

UCLUELET (CP) — More than 140 seiners crowded the shallow bays of Barkley Sound on the west coast of Vancouver Island Thursday morning as the fisheries service of the federal environment department opened for two hours a seine fishery for herring.

The weather co-operated and an area that has weathered six gales in five days turned dead calm and sunny.

As the skiffs peeled off the nets for the first set, three boats fouled their gear and were out for the day.

Some of the boats caught fish right away and started to heel crazily in the flat water as the seinesw ere drawn in.

Gulls and eagles crash-dived for fragments as airplanes and the helicopter circled the action.

The herring co-operated magnificiently and in two hours more than 7,500 tons were netted at a basic price of $143.50 a ton to the boat crews.

The value of the herring is not in the fish but in the eggs of the mature females, a maximum of about 15 per cent of each ton caught.

Since the herring roe fishery started in 1972 it has grown to the point where last year's catch was estimated to have a $60 million wholesale value.

With that kind of money everyone takes chances.

During the five years of the fishery, there have been sinkings, capsizings, drownings and beachings. The fisheries service, knowing the fish must be taken when they are ripe to be of any value, gambles against the weather and the fish condition in allocating opening and closing times on a spot basis.

This week, the gillnet boats lost and the seiners won as the west coast weather made a shambles out of the small boat fishery.

With winds blowing 70 knots on the outside of Barkley sound and as high as 40 knots inside, the 400 gillnetters in the area could not get good sets.

But on Thursday Sydney Inlet was calm as the seiners went to work.

Operating with depth sounders, the seine boats can track a school of herring as it moves inshore to spawn.

During a test period before the fishery was opened, a boat tracked a school of herring three miles long by four miles wide by 10 fathoms deep.

While the seiners were beating their way north up the west coast of Vancouver Island is steadily worsening weather, gambling on where the next opening would be.

"I got beat here," said one gillnetter in the Ucluelet beer parlor Wednesday night. "I'm heading for Tahsis in the morning. There's gotta be some bucks up there."

Three Men Escape Injury As Small Plane Crashes

NAKUSP (CP) — Three men survived the crash of their Cessna 172 aircraft Friday near Kimball Lake, six miles east of this southern interior community.

The plane got caught in a down draft and crashed on a ridge in a heavily wooded area. It was located by a plane from Canadian Forces Base Comox with the aid of a rescue signal locater device.

Pilot Albert Eversfield of Castlegar and two doctors from Notre Dame University in Nelson were picked up by helicopter and flown to Nakusp Hospital for observation but were later released.

The passengers' names were withheld by rescue officials.

Market Proposed

VANCOUVER (CP) — A farmers' market, theatres and an art school are among projects being studied as early steps in the redevelopment of Granville Island in the city's False Creek area. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation consultants outlined the plans Friday after dedication of a new seawall on the island by Justice Minister Ron Basford.

Plea for Mill Site

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Burt Smart, vice-president of administration for Eurocan Pulp and Timber Ltd., said Thursday the company will have to look at another site for a sawmill if the British Columbia land commission does not release a parcel of land in Houston from the agricultural land reserve.

The B.C. Development Corporation applied to a hearing of the commission Tuesday to have 300 acres of agricultural land in Houston excluded from the reserve.

The corporation wants to lease the land to a consortium formed by Weldwood of Canada and Eurocan, who would build a $17 million sawmill on the site.

Smart said in a telephone interview from Kitimat that his company has trouble meeting cutting requirements in the Cotsa public sustained yield unit southeast of Houston and that sawmill construction is urgent.

Dredging Protested

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Wildlife Federation sent a telegram Friday to federal Environment Minister Romeo LeBlanc protesting dredging in the Fraser River. The federation said the work is contrary to a former federal recommendation to protect the Fraser delta and its marshland.

Director Appointed

VANCOUVER (CP) — The provincial cabinet announced Friday that Gus Leonidas has been appointed director of the mediation services branch of the labor department. He has been acting director since June, 1976.

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Royal Hudson, the provincial government's historic steam locomotive, will leave March 19 on a 3,100-mile trip down the United States west coast to promote tourism in B.C. and the silver jubilee of Queen Elizabeth's reign. One car will contain B.C. museum displays and another will display replicas of the coronation throne and Crown jewels.

COWICHAN LAND THAW

Environment Minister Jim Nielsen announced Friday the removal of about 348 acres on Cowichan Lake from the Agricultural Land Reserve.

Nielsen said the predominantly forested land on the lakeshore between Marble Bay and North Arm has been under intensive study by the Environment and Land-Use Committee for two years.

He said the ELUC had recommended exclusion of the property from the land reserve because only a small part of the acreage is arable, some of the land is already being used by a mobile home park and other commercial interests ,and the arable pocket is divided into many small parcels.

Removal of the land from reserve status was initially requested by the Cowichan Regional District.

Nielsen also announced the exclusion of another 199 acres from the land reserve on Middleton Mountain in the North Okanagan. He said requests for removal of an additional 175 acres there had been turned down because the land a high agricultural capability.

CHARLES PROVING ELUSIVE TARGET

NAIROBI — Prince Charles proved harder to catch than big game Friday for a crowd of mainly British reporters trying to track him down on a private camping trip in Kenya's Abedare Mountains.

The reporters wanted to check an unconfirmed rumor that a blonde woman is with the prince on his mountain retreat.

A British high commission spokesman in Nairobi refused all comment other than to confirm that the prince arrived in Kenya last Sunday on "a private visit."

This means, said the spokesman, that no information is given to the press, including any comment on reports of a women camping companion.

The spokesman also declined to confirm that the prince is to meet with Kenya's President Jomo Kenyatta on Tuesday or say when the prince will come down from the mountains.

Since meetings with Kenyatta are normally covered by press photographers, reporters pursuing the prince since his arrival hoped his reported blonde lady friend would accompany him.

"But we're all going to look pretty foolish," commented one reporter, "if she turns out to be a brunette."

Rita Hayworth Termed 'A Chronic Alcoholic'

SANTA ANA, Calif. — Rita Hayworth, the red-haired movie star of the 1940s and favorite pinup of Second World War GIs, is disabled by "mental disorder" and alcoholism and should be put in the care of the public guardian, a Superior Court judge was told Friday.

Miss Hayworth, 58, was in Hoag Memorial Hospital at Newport Beach.

"She is now unable or unwilling to accept responsibility for her treatment" and is a chronic alcoholic, said a statement from a hospital physician, Dr. James Miner.

The doctor's statement accompanied a petition by the Orange County Public Guardian's office that it be put in control of Miss Hayworth's affairs because she "is gravely disabled as the result of mental disorder."

Her five husbands included actor-director Orson Welles and the wealthy Moslem prince, Aly Khan.

She had a daughter by each of them actress Rebecca Welles and New York socialite Yashmin Khan.

In the 1950s, as she grew older, she switched to occasional character roles.

Baptists Protest Show About Jesus

CLEVELAND — A protest campaign against the showing of a National Broadcasting Co. film on the life of Jesus, scheduled to be telecast locally in two three-hour segments on Palm Sunday and Easter evenings, has been initiated by a fundamentalist Baptist publication.

The Ohio Independent Baptist also has threatened the program's sponsor, General Motors Corp., with a consumer boycott of GM products unless sponsorship of the program is withdrawn by the nation's largest automaker.

The Baptist objection to the film is that it leaves out the miracles of Jesus, such as walking on the water and changing water into wine at a wedding ceremony, and presents Jesus as a man, not as God.

WKYC-TV, Channel 3, the local NBC owned-and-operated television station said Friday it already had received many letters and telephone calls "demanding" that the station give up its plans to show the program.

Polanski Held In Rape Of Girl, 13

LOS ANGELES — Director Roman Polanski was arrested Friday night and booked on suspicion of forcibly raping a 13-year-old girl in the home of actor Jack Nicholson.

Polanski, 43, was arrested without incident at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel by police and investigators from the district attorney's office. He was released early today on $2,500 bond.

While searching Nicholson's home, where the rape allegedly occurred, authorities arrested Nicholson's long time girlfriend, Angelica Huston, 26, daughter of director John Huston, on suspicion of possession of cocaine.

Nicholson was not in the house at the time, police said.

She was held on $1,500 bail.

BIGGS DIES

BOSTON (AP) — E. Power Biggs, 71, internationally known organist who appeared with the Boston Symphony and Philadelphia orchestras and produced numerous recordings of classical pipe organ music, died Thursday, it was announced Friday. Burial will be private, but a memorial will be held March 27 in Memorial Church, Harvard University, Cambridge.

City Holidaymakers Fail In Suit Against Totem

By ROGER STONEBANKS
Times Staff

Court action by four disappointed holidaymakers against a Victoria travel agency has been dismissed in a 17-page decision by county court Judge E. J. C. Stewart.

The four — Richard Barnswell and Marion Will of Victoria and Kenneth and Audrey Meek of Calgary — sued Totem Travel Service Limited of Victoria for alleged breach of contract and misrepresentation, claiming their Tahiti vacation turned into a nightmare and they left.

They complained of landing exhausted from a sleepless flight, being subjected to dirty linen, insects and salamanders infesting their room, a flooded bathroom, fleabites, terrible meals and rude staff.

Other witnesses in the same time in December, 1974, told an opposite story, saying they had beautiful vacations, no complaints and would return.

Most of the evidence was heard last April and May but the case had to be adjourned To Nov. 17 for completion because it over-ran alloted court time. Judgment was given Friday.

Reviewing information given by Totem Travel in brochures advertising the Club Mediterranee resort at Moorea, Judge Stewart said he could not find the information "generally speaking" untrue or improper material to be inserted in brochures.

"I am satisfied that the plaintiffs (the four holidaymakers) did not find the facilities, services and atmosphere up to the standards they were entitled to expect from the information contained in the brochures," said Judge Stewart.

"The Club Mediteranee failed to meet its standards as far as the plaintiffs were concerned.

"Whether there was breach of contract on the part of the Club Mediterranee is not the issue here. The issue is whether the defendant (Totem Travel) can be held responsible for the misfortunes of the plaintiffs.

"The negligence alleged against the defendants is that they held out the Club Mediterranee to be excellent accommodation when they knew or ought to have known the said accommodation was totally unacceptable both generally and as to the plaintiffs needs in particular.

"It is not a fact that the accommodation was totally unacceptable generally. It was unacceptable to the plaintiffs but there is no way, in my opinion, that the defendants could have anticipated this reaction by the plaintiffs.

"It is also alleged that the defendants were negligent in failing to obtain ssufficient information as to the accommodation arrangements at the Club Mediterranee, when they knew or ought to have known that the information they were giving" to one of the plaintiffs would be relied upon by the others.

"On the evidence before me I would have to find that even if the dendants had sent their scout to the premises of the Club Mediterrancee on the Island of Moorea they would have had no reason to change their general opinion of the place as a holiday resort."

Judge Stewart said the "most effective" method of checking advertising material is to consider reports of people who have visited an area.

"In this case the defendants had had no adverse reports from any client visiting the premises of the Club Mediterranee in Tahiti but had had favorable reports. Furthermore, the Club Mediterranee is well known in the travel industry and finds favor with many people."

Discussing the conflicting accounts about conditions in December, 1974, at Moorea, Judge Stewart said "it is difficult to believe" they described the same general scene.

"But they did and I substantially believe them all. It's a good example of the difference in human tastes, patience and reactions," he said.

Judge Stewart said "the only basis, it seems to me" on which a travel agency could be held responsible for an experience as described by the plaintiffs would arise from the duty to assess accurately the likes, dislikes and reactions of individuals.

"Even if this was humanly possible there was in my opinion in this case no way in which Mr. (John) Hampton (of Totem Travel) could have foreseen the situation described by the plaintiffs.

"A travel agent has to use reasonable care in disseminating information to clients, but on the evidence in this case this duty was fulfilled by the defendants.

"No matter how one approaches the matter the plaintiffs claims must fail.

"The statements attributed to the defendants have not been proven generally untrue. There has been no breach of contract. Even if any incorrect information was given to the plaintiffs directly or indirectly there has been no negligence established on the part of the defendants."

He said the "mistake" of the four holidaymakers "was due in my opinion to a failure to assess accurately the material in the brochures and this was aggravated by some failure on the part of the staff of Club Mediterranee in their obligations to the plaintiffs as guests.

"Whether the trip to Takiti was a mistake from the beginning, or whether facilities of the Club Mediterranee proved totally unacceptable because of failure of that organization to meet its contractual obligations, the defendants cannot be held accountable for the resulting disasters."

Tremor Shakes Singapore

SINGAPORE (Reuter) — Hundreds of people fled from high-rise apartment buildings when a slight earth tremor shook Singapore on Wednesday. A meteorological department spokesman said the tremor was caused by an earthquake off the west coast of the Indonesian island of Sumatra about 300 miles from here. There were no reports of damage or casualties.

Nuclear Merits Debated

A public debate between nuclear disarmament authority Prof. William Epstein and Lt.-Gen. Reg Lane, former deputy commander in chief of the North American Air Defence Command (NORAD), will be held at 12:30 p.m. Wednesday, March 23, in the University of Victoria's old gymnasium.

Titled, Survival in a Nuclear Age, the debate is on whether nuclear weapons can still be relied upon as a deterrent.

The moderator will be university president Dr. Howard Petch.

Epstein, a visiting professor at UVic, is retired director of the United Nations Secretariat's disarmament division. He's now a consultant to the UN and is an outspoken critic of the nuclear arms race.

He was recently awarded Mexico's highest civil decoration, the Order of the Aztec Eagle, in recognition of his work in establishing a nuclear-free zone in Latin America.

Lane was the senior Canadian officer in NORAD when he retired two years ago.

Debate organizer Fraser Homer-Dixon, a UVic student senator, says "forced confrontation" between the two should be an educational experience.

A six-minute statement will be given by Epstein, followed by a similar one by Lane. Then will follow four-minute rebuttals and 20 minutes of discussion. The event will end with a 10-minute question period.

The debate is free and open to the public. It is being sponsored by the Alma Mater Society and Student and Ancillary Services.

Carter Angers Congress

WASHINGTON (WP) — A dispute over President Carter's plans to kill at least 19 major water development projects has opened a new and serious breach between Congress and the White House. It could endanger other parts of the president's program unless repaired.

Friday, the conflict appeared to be intensifying. White House press secretary Jody Powell said the president intends to pursue his attempts to kill any projects he deems "an inefficient use of the taxpayers' money." His statement came a day after the Senate voted 65 to 24 Thursday to oppose Carter's plan to review the 19 projects.

Powell made clear the president will use all lawful means to cut projects once he decides they are based on loose criteria and that he will seek public support for his position. Otherwise, Powell said, Carter's goal of a balanced budget would be impossible.

However, Senate majority leader Robert Byrd (Dem.-W. Va.), described the Thursday vote as "a clear signal to the White House that this Congress expects to be consulted (on) matters which come within the responsibility of the legislative branch."

He said the message isn't confined to public works projects, but applied to "other things, too." "Congress is an equal and independent branch, it wants to be consulted," he said, "not on every little thing but there are areas on which Congress has a right to be consulted."

He said that while relations between Carter and the congressional leadership are "generally good, this was a mistake . . . a serious aberration."

N.Y. CITY BAILED OUT

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. government is coming to New York City's rescue again with a $255-million loan but Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal says: "It's not going to be a free lunch."

City officials must reciprocate with sound financial practices, Blumenthal said Friday as he announced the loan.

The loan assures New York City that it can pay its bills until the end of June, including more than $125 million due next week.

He also disclosed that the Carter administration will propose some form of federal banking mechanism to help cities meet special needs, but with "some strings attached" to assure that cities do not overspend.

U.S. Army Played At Killing Nixon

LOS ANGELES (AP) — United States army experts using "mock-killer chemicals" carried out a simulated assassination of President Nixon and the Congress in 1969-70, a former weapons researcher has charged.

Lowell Ponte, whose work was until 1970 by International Research and Technology Corp. of Washington which worked for the Pentagon, said Thursday that both the White House and Capitol Hill are still vulnerable to this type of attack.

The army said Tuesday that it had conducted 239 open-air germ warfare tests between 1949 and 1969, including a secret simulated attack on San Francisco with a bacterium later suspected of causing pneumonia. There was no immediate comment from the army on Ponte's charges.

Ponte, writing in the April issue of Playgirl Magazine, said a team from the U.S. army chemical and biological warfare research centre at Fort Detrick, Md., "penetrated both the capitol and White House and released in both places chemicals that could have been "deadly germs or nerve gas."

The team, Ponte said, "carried out simulated terrorist attacks on the air conditioning systems of the White House and the capitol and on the drinking water used in one major federal office building."

Province Will Pay Half the Shot

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Economic Development Minister Don Phillips told a meeting of community leaders Friday his department will pay half the bill for establishing a commission to promote ecenomic development in Greater Victoria.

Phillips also offered the full support of his research staff in conducting any economic studies needed.

"Economic development will go to the areas that really want it, that go out and aggressively seek it," he told the group gathered in a Legislative Buildings' committee room to hold the second of a series of meeting aimed at finding ways to bolster the economy.

"We're quite prepared to help you and put up some money, just tell us what you want to do," he said.

Phillips also warned the group not to strike a commission comprised mostly of politicians, because it would be less effective than one made up of a cross-section of business and labor represenatives.

The commission's function, he said, should be to plan and co-ordinate economic development in the area and to "knock some heads together among the various levels of government — provincial and municipal — when excessive red tape threatens opportunities to expand our economic base."

Recreation Minister Sam Bawlf agreed with Phillips on the roll of politicians on the proposed commission, saying ". . . it shouldn't become just another government department but should stay at arms length and not be dominated by politicians at either the provincial or municipal level."

He added that his comment wasn't meant as "a slur on politicians" but just a reminder that a politically-dominated body might only become further entangled in the red tape it would be responsible for cutting.

Saanich Mayor Ed Lum and Victoria Mayor Mike Young were pleased the first steps are being taken towards the formation of an economic development commission for the region.

"We've been talking about this sort of thing for many years now, but it's never got off the ground . . , it's good to see that we're finally trying to achieve something."

Esquimalt-Saanich MP Donald Munro told the group the establishment of a development commission would be a positivie move, but cautioned that, "we've got to be sure exactly what our goals are — we don't want another Toronto or Vancouver . . . we've got to decide just how far we want to go or it could mushroom and we'd have pavement from here to the airport."

Victoria MLA Charles Barber, the man who first proposed the formation of a development commission, said he is "extremely pleased with the support that has gathered around this idea."

He commended Phillips for offering financial and staff assistance and said he thought a commission could be operative within five months.

"I'm really happy that a whole pile of people are picking up on this," he said, ". . .maybe it's desperation that's driven us together, but at least we're together."

The group plans to meet again at the end of the month to approve working terms of reference for the commission.

Oak Bay MLA Scott Wallace, who organized the series of meetings, said that, "these are all just interested people talking right now, and we've got no authority to really do anything, but I'm encouraged by the positive direction it's taking."

Uganda Visit Off

BRISTOL, England (Reuter) — The Anglican bishop of Bristol Thursday cancelled an official visit to Uganda with 80 people from his diocese because he could not guarantee their safety, he said. Bishop John Tinsley said that in the light of recent events and advice received from Uganada, he had decided to postpone a proposed visit to mark the centenary of the Anglican church there.

Local Group Helps Them Have Fun—But Needs Help Itself

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

Scattered throughout Greater Victoria are many hundreds of men and women, girls and boys, who in a subtle and deadly way are prisoners of our social system.

We're the jailers without knowing it.

Today, tomorrow and the next day the little things which give our lives a tang and color are out of reach for them, not as punishment but simply because the rest of us haven't noticed yet and decided to do something about it.

Not that these prisoners aren't supplied their basic needs because they are. We give some a pension and others we shelter in big clean "institutions" where they are fed right on time every day. Some are even taken to the bathroom on a sort of schedule.

They have their own lives — of sorts. But the joyful juice of a little freedom just for the fun of it is missing.

Things like taking off on a whim to a movie, or for a beer, or to go skating. Like the quick trip down to the store for a carton of milk or toothpaste or a package of nuts. Like window shopping or fiddling with a new menu in a kitchen.

Like going to a party at someone else's house or going camping in a tent at Goldstream or jumping on a trampoline in the school gym or looking over the water at East Sooke Park or stopping for pizza or a Big Mac.

Little things when they're handy but big things when they're not.

How do you do these things when you're stuck in a wheelchair, your mind clear but your arms and legs always shaking? Or when you can walk and maybe even run but brain damage has left the world in a fog for you? Or when you can think but not hear or speak?

We call these people "the handicapped" because it's a nice neat word. We see they exist but without some room for fun that's not the same as living.

A little more than a year ago a handful of young people in Victoria organized a society to see handicapped people had the chance for a little fun.

The Victoria Society for the Recreation of Handicapped Persons has bumped along since then on sporadic government grants and some help from local service clubs and individuals.

They've developed a wealth of activities for children, teens and adults and the best measure of their success is that about 200 handicapped people a month turn out for them.

The society operates from a storefront office at 2535 Government St. and has a full-time staff of eight headed by Judith Armstrong, 24, assisted by Alan Currie, 35. Throughout the community about 80 volunteers donate time and effort to keep the recreation programs going.

The society got under way in November of 1975 with a federal Local Initiatives grant for $36,810. It got another LIP grant of $20,400 for expanded services last November. In between it got a $30,000 grant from Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy last June. The provincial government is now considering further financing.

Meanwhile the society is almost out of money, and needs help from the public. So the Victoria Times, in co-operation with radio station CJVI, is today launching an appeal.

The target: at least $20,000 to help keep the society's 17 programs going.

Every day for the rest of this month we'll tell you more about the children, teens and adults this group helps, how they help and how those helped feel about it.

We hope you'll come to appreciate as we do that this is an organization worth backing. If the provincial government sees solid public support for it, provincial support is more likely.

Drop in at the handicapped recreation centre, at 2535 Government, just below Hillside, talk to the staff and see for yourself.

Most of the money donated will go to pay for the staff of eight who double up on chores to keep the recreation programs going.

The co-ordinator is paid $184 a week, the assistant co-ordinator $175 and the six other workers $140 weekly while the money lasts.

Paul Taylor, a certified general accountant, is a volunteer who will be keeping track of the fund-raising campaign.

The society has applied for a tax registration number which would make contributions tax deductible. Receipts will be mailed on request.

'Sure You Can'

Helping hand and warm words from Judith Armstrong give Terry Van Noordt, 10, the boost she needs to try the trampoline at Henderson Park recreation centre. After-school gym class for children has turned into one of the most popular programs offered the handicapped by local organization Judith heads.

How You Can Help

Make your donation to this worthwhile cause.

Cheques or money orders should be made payable to "Handicapped Recreation Society" and mailed c/o Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., P.O. Box 300, Victoria, B.C., V8W 2N4.

Donations placed in an envelope addressed to the Handicapped Recreation Society may also be left at the counter on the main floor of the Victoria Times building at 2621 Douglas.

If you wish a receipt, please request one with your donation and sign your name and address.

The Times will publish lists of all donors unless they request that their donation be anonymous.

You Want to Know More?

If you are a member of a service club or other organization and you would like fellow members to know more about this society and the great work it performs, guest speakers can usually be arranged to address meetings. If you wish a speaker, call Miss Armstrong or Mr. Currie at 383-4029.

Sidney Braced For Dry Time After Ruling

A ruling by the B.C. Building Code Appeal Board could have disastrous effects on the town of Sidney and lead to serious water problems this summer.

Ald. Jerry Tregaskis said today he was "absolutely floored" by the board's decision to allow Sidney resident Paul Walker the right to develop two lots. Tregaskis said Walker had been denied a building permit because neither lot was connected to the municipal water system.

But Walker, represented by a Victoria lawyer, argued successfully he had private wells on the lots, and noted neither North Saanich nor Central Saanich, the two other Saanich Peninsula municipalities, deny permits on lots without water connections.

Tregaskis said Sidney has about 700 other applicants in the same position as Walker who have been denied permits solely because of the town's inability to provide an adequate water supply.

"Our water system is already strained to capacity," Tregaskis said. "If the board's decision means we have to give permits to all 700 applicants we've got problems. It will be disastrous."

He said he understood the town solicitor is appealing the decision.

Treagskis said he fears if private wells are used for domestic purposes the ground water level may drop so low the results would be drastic.

Sidney gets about half its water supply from four municipal wells and purchases the rest from Central Saanich which has a lease for Elk Lake water.

Tregaskis said the water problems in Sidney will not abate until the new permanent line connecting the town to the Victoria water system is completed next year.

26 More Heart Attacks

What does the saccharin ban announced by the federal government this week mean to the Capital district?

Another three-quarters of a million pounds or so around waistlines and 26 more heart attacks a year, that's what.

If statements made by a New York cardiologist after announcement of the saccharin ban in Canada and the U.S. are applied locally, that's what the effect works out to.

Bruce Halliday (PC — Oxford) said in the commons Friday that across Canada, a switch to sugar means Canadians could gain an extra 60 million pounds of weight and suffer an extra 2,500 heart attacks a year.

$4.1M APPROVED FOR NEW WINGS

The provincial government Friday gave the University of Victoria a $4.1 million financial lift for new construction but it's only a drop in the bucket compared with the university's five-year projected capital needs.

A total of $3,222,000 will go towards construction of a new music wing in the MacLaurin Building, while the remaining $885,000 will be used to pay the bills for the already completed third wing of the Clearihue Building.

UVic vice-president George Pederson is pleased with the money but said it fell far short of the five-year building program projected to cost $42 million.

The government also approved $7.8 million construction for Simon Fraser and $3.7 million construction for University of British Columbia, the two other public universities in the province.

At Simon Fraser the money will go towards building a facility for the education faculty, the archeology department, and a French-language training centre.

At UBC a library processing centre will be built and work started on a $5.7 million aquatic centre.

One-Way Road for Missionaries

Take today. At this minute, three young Americans — would-be missionaries threatened with deportation — are safely back on their own side of the border after being told they couldn't stay in Canada and study at a school that didn't exist, anyway.

Puzzling? Sure it is.

The three — Terry Brooks, 22, Connie Haugen, 22, and 19-year-old Alison Woelke — had all travelled more than 2,000 miles from Tucson, Arizona, to take a course at Victoria's new Highway Missionary Training Centre.

They were not made welcome in this country. In fact, they were made to feel distinctly unwelcome! Yet they are not bitter. As Alison told me, bitterness is not a Christian quality. But they are sad they've been made to leave and baffled by the official reception given them by their northern neighbors.

The three young Americans had worked with Canadian missionaries in Arizona and California and decided they would like to renew acquaintances and work with them again up here. So they applied to enrol at the Highway Missionary Centre. So far so good.

Jim Palosaari, who has been involved with the Upper Room Society which helps down-and-outs in the street, helps run the centre from a recently-converted old house at 228 Edward Street in Vic West.

The theory is, the would-be missionaries undergo two six-week sessions of spiritual training, and instruction in first aid and basic car mechanics and then set out as a sort of mobile church patrolling the island's highways. Using two converted Volkswagen vans with the words Highway Missionaries emblazoned on the side, they will travel between Victoria and Campbell River and from Parksville over to Tofino and back all summer picking up hitch-hikers, taking them a stretch of their journey and warming them with a cup of coffee and the word of God.

Now some may not think that's such a great idea. Each to his own. But the thing is: surely a few American kids should be allowed to join with their Canadian friends and be a part of something they believe in. What harm can they do? Where's the crime?

There isn't one, of course. Yet Terry and Alison (Connie couldn't stand the pressure on her any longer and left for the U.S. Wednesday) told me Thursday they were treated like criminals and undesirables at the border by arrogant Canadian immigration authorities. The trouble, Palosaari believes, stems from the fact they were too honest.

Sandie Brock, who with husband Owen act as house parents at Edward Street, explains:

"When the Americans said they'd like to come up, we called the Canadian immigration people and asked them what we should do. They said to tell them to apply for students' visas."

But at the border they were told those visas wouldn't do because the school wasn't accredited. When Palosaari challenged them and asked if the Americans could come in on the usual visitors' permits, he was told "No!"

"It's crazy," says Jim. "The reason they gave was because you can't be a visitor and study at a school — yet they don't recognize our school, anyway!"

Finally, after a great hassle, the three were let in on a one-week visa but their short stay wasn't peaceful.

"Bob Malcolm and a guy named Schroeder from the Immigration Department came storming in here before the week was up and said they had to be out of the country by midnight on Friday," says Palosaari, who believes their actions were part of a plan to make things awkward for him and force him to leave. (Palosaari is an American who has been here almost a year now on three-month visas that have been extended several times.)

At the suggestion of NDP-MLA Charles Barber, Jim contacted Victoria MP Allan McKinnon in Ottawa. He got a lot of sympathy and support but in the end there was nothing they could do. Time ran out and the American kids left Friday afternoon.

With someone from the Highway Missionaries Centre, they headed for Seattle where they will re-apply to re-enter Canada. Probably, some time, they'll be let in again. But isn't it all a lot of nonsense?

Most of all, the would-be missionaries were upset by the attitude taken.

"Surely they could say 'Well, this is the way it is and we're sorry,' but they don't," Palosaari says. "They really enjoy their job and the opportunity to treat us as riff-raff. One immigration guy accused us of being no more than charity cases and that's not true as we at the centre don't allow anyone to accept welfare cheques. We do odd jobs to pay our way."

"You know," Alison Woelke says distantly and with sadness, "I studied Canada when I was at school . . ."

" . . . And I was always under the impression that Canadians were gentle, reserved people."

One Win from Crown And Thinking of Rest

MONTREAL (CP) — Jim Ursel's Quebec rink was one victory away from the Canadian men's curling championship but the Montreal skip said he was only inetrested in a little rest.

"I think i'll go back to the hotel and relax," Ursel said Friday night after his foursome scored a 7-2 victory over Manitoba's John Usackis of Lac du Bonnett in 13th-draw action. "I can use it."

The Quebec victory gave Ursel an 8-2 record, good enough for first place ahead of Roy Vinther's British Columbia rink from Vancouver with an 8-3 mark. The loss dropped Usackis out of the running, tied for fourth place with Tom Reed's Alberta rink from Edmonton with 6-4 marks.

The Montreal contingent entered Friday's play with a 6-2 record, but came up with a hard-fought 9-6 victory over Vinthers in the afternoon draw. The Vancouver crew, which has a bye from today's final-round play, then dropped a 5-3 decision to Wayne Hamilton's stubborn Newfoundland rink from St. John's in evening play.

Ursel said his team was aware of the importance of the Manitoba game and didn't intend to blow it before an enthusiastic Velodrome crowd.

"It would have been very disappointing to come out here and lose," he said. "B.C. is a good team but we didn't want to let them get away."

Ursel needs a win over Fitzner's Nova Scotians in the final draw, which was scheduled to get under way at 1:30 p.m. EST today, to take first place and represent Canada at the world championship at Karlstad, Sweden, later this month.

In other 12th-draw games earlier Friday, Newfoundland edged Saskatchewan 8-7, the Territories downed Alberta 10-3, Ontario beat P.E.I. 8-4 and Manitoba whipped Northern Ontario 10-1.

Ursel, bidding to become the first Quebec skip to win the men's title in the 48-year history of the event, said the sixth end against Manitoba was the big one.

"He had a chance for two and we ended up stealing three."

Usackis said his team didn't deserve to win their crucial 13th-draw match.

"We weren't up to par tonight," he said. "Jimmy made all the great shots and that's what counts."

Hamilton said his Newfoundland team tended to let up in games against weaker teams but came up big when they had to.

"We wanted to go out and give B.C. a good game. We wouldn't have been disappointed if we had curled a good game and lost but it's great it worked out this way."

Runners Tackle Jewels After Tripping Tigers

PENTICTON — Reynolds Roadrunners, making it with a thrilling victory over an arch-rival, and defending champion Salmon Arm Jewels play off this evening for the British Columbia high school girls' basketball championship.

Reynolds took the toughest route Friday.

Roadrunners surivved a 22-point performance by Tracey Huclack but managed to defeat Templeton of Vancouver 52-43 in a quarter-final, then upset Victoria High Tigers 30-28 on Rhonda Keller's layup basket with 18 seconds left.

Salmon Arm had it much easier. The defending champions downed Kamloops 50-31 with Bev Smith scoring 23 points, then drubbed Mennonite Educational Insitute of Abbotsford 42-19 in the semi-final.

Smith again topped Jewels with 12 points against MEI.

The Reynolds triumph over Tigers was the big one. It marked the second time this season that Roadrunners had tripped Vic High, which was unbeaten in league play.

Reynolds defeated Tigers in the Lower Island final but lost to Vic High in the Island finale. Tigers, provincial champions in 1975, were runnersup last year.

Reynolds' previous best finish was third, in 1975.

Reynolds coach Russ Tschritter utilized a full-court press throughout to upset Tigers. Reynolds led 14-10 at the half but teams were tied 20-20 going into the final quarter.

Keller finished with 12 points while Karen McComber added eight and Tracy McAra six. Vicki Fitzpatrick topped Tigers with 14 and Sandy Lewis scored six.

Lewis counted eight points as the Tigers defeated Cranbrook 28-23 in the quarter-finals.

Against Templeton, Donna Rogers sparked Reynolds with 13 points.

Victoria will face MEI today in the playoff to decide third and fifth places. Kamloops and Prince Rupert will play off for fourth spot.

Nanaimo, getting 23 points from Susan Shaw, won its first game of the tournament by defeating Abbotsford 45 34 and will play Carson Graham for 10th spot in the 16-team tournament.

POLICE CURLERS GO MONDAY

Rinks from 11 provinces and the Northwest Territories move into the Victoria Curling Club for Monday's opening draws in the 1977 Rothman's Canadian police curling championships, and that includes a "hometown hope" harboring one wish.

"A good, quick start . . ."

That's the intention of Bob Hawkes, skip of a Victoria-RCMP combination that is representing British Columbia in the 12-rink, round robin playdowns.

Hawkes, supported by Steve Holotuk, Murray Dew and Ralph Svenson, feels his crew "stands a chance" if they can avoid the kind of starts that plagued the rink in earlier playdowns. In crucial matches leading to the B.C. title, the Hawkes foursome had to overcome large, early deficits. Once they trailed by six points. In another game, they were down by five before the rink got rolling.

A sputtering start, Hawkes feels, won't do against the other provincial champions. And especially against Roy Gislason's Manitoba entry.

The RCMP crew from Winnipeg, which has former Victorian Neil Dickson as its third, is seeking its third straight title.

The Gislason rink will start as one of the pre-spiel favorites along with Alberta's Ken Ursuliak. Ursuliak was a finalist in this year's Alberta (men's) Consols playdowns.

Also competing in the 21st annual championships are Murray Macara of Northwest Territories, Norm Gilbertson of Saskatchewan, Bill Dustin of Northern Ontario, Bob Nicholson of Ontario, Yvon Grondin of Quebec, Eric Bower of P.E.I., Sonny Hirtle of New Brunswick, Eric Coughey of Nova Scotia and George MacCharles of Newfoundland.

Draws for the first five days (Monday to Thursday) are scheduled for 2 and 7 p.m. Starting times are 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. for the closing rounds Friday and next Saturday.

Ernie's 'Donation' Vetoed by the Boss

New Westminster Bruins' owner-coach Ernie McLean wants to "donate" two Western Canada Hockey League games to the Winnipeg Monarchs, but he's been overruled by ocmmissioner Ed Chynoweth.

McLean disclosed Friday that he requested the WCHL cancel New Westminster's two home games against Winnipeg but that Chynoweth turned him down.

The Monarchs, who meet Victoria Cougars tonight in Memorial Arena, are scheduled to play Bruins Sunday and again on March 20.

McLean said he made the request after a report in the Winnipeg Tribune said Monarch owner-coach Gerry Brisson is convinced the Bruins are out to maim his players and he is considering having them wear protective face masks,

"We don't have to put up with that sort of crap from within our own league," said McLean. "I'd just as soon give our season ticket-holders tickets to our first two playoff games and let Winnipeg have the four points."

McLean said the Bruins are ninth in the league in total penalty minutes but Brisson said in an interview from Kamloops, where his team lost 7-1 to the Chiefs Friday night, that his star defenceman Kevin McCarthy "had his nose broken 17 seconds into a game last year at Queen's Park Arena (the Bruins' home rink) before he'd even touched the puck."

"I never teach our players to play in such a way that they'd intimidate the other team," Brisson said. "I'm supposed to be an adult . . . taking kids out to that . . . I was ashamed to be there.

"The last time we played in Winnipeg, a boy (Gord Blumenschein) lost a tooth and it wasn't accidental."

McCarthy is acknowledged as one of the premier defencemen in the league and holds the playmaking record. Heading into tonight's game against the Cougars. McCarthy has 77 goals and 264 assists, including a 19-88 record this season, to pass the former assist record of 250, established by forward Dale McMullen in a four-year career with Brandon.

McLean also had another problem — in addition to Brisson's accusations — pop up this week. His top defenceman, Barry Beck, is in intensive care in a New Westminster hospital suffering from pneumonia.

In other games Friday, New Westminster defeated Portland Winter Hawks 3-2, Medicine Hat Tigers downed Regina Pats 6-4, Flin Flon Bombers beat Saskatoon Blades 5-3 and Calgary Centennials rallied to salvage a 5-5 tie with Brandon.

'Wrong Way' Shot Excused

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Basketball Association said Friday night an investigation had cleared Earl Monroe of New York Knicks of any wrong-doing in a last-second shot into the wrong basket Thursday night.

Monroe's shot at the buzzer didn't affect the outcome, since the Knicks defeated Portland Trail Blazers 108-104. However, the Knicks were ahead 108-102 until Monroe's jump shot from the corner. They also were six-point favorites, and therein lies the reason for the investigation.

Those who wagered on the Knicks as six-point favorites lost their bets. Had the Knicks won by six, all bets would have been cancelled.

The NBA announced Friday it had begun an investigation "under instructions from commissioner Larry O'Brien."

Friday night, the league said O'Brien and deputy commissioner Simon Gourdine had reviewed the game film and league officials had interviewed Monroe. The NBA called Monroe's shot "a spur-of-the-moment" and "unpremeditated" act and said the Knicks' guard described his shot as a "whim."

The Knicks led 108-100 after Portland's Johnny Davis hit a jump shot with seven seconds left. The ensuing inbounds pass by New York's Bill Bradley was stolen by Lionel Hollins, whose lay-up made it 108-102.

Monroe then took an inbounds pass from Walt Frazier and calmly shot a corner jumper into the Portland basket as the buzzer sounded and the Knicks headed for their dressing room.

"I forgot which end of the court I was on," was Monroe's explanation. Later, he said: "I thought the game was over."

The incident came on the heels of an NBA investigation into printed rumors that some of its games are being fixed. League officials say no grounds have been found for such an accusation.

Day to Remember

By The Canadian Press

Baseball's newest franchises will always have occasion to look kindly upon Friday, March 11, 1977. It was the day Toronto Blue Jays and Seattle Mariners tasted victory for the first time.

Granted, they were only the exhibition variety, but any victory tastes sweet when you're expected to lose a bundle during the season.

The Blue Jays, who were rained out of Thursday's scheduled opener, held New York Mets to three hits and made off with a 3-1 triumph.

"It was a wonder day for all of us," said manager Roy Hartsfield.

Meanwhile, the Mariners surrendered 16 runs while losing Thursday's opener to Oakland A's 16-10 but turned right around and beat the A's 16-7 Friday.

The Mets got good pitching but did little hitting. Lee Mazzilli bashed the third pitch from Toronto starter Bill Singer for a home run and Ed Kurpiel and John Stearns singled in the second inning, but the next 19 Mets were rubbed out by Singer, Jerry Johnson, Dennis DeBarr and Chuck Hartenstein until Leo Foster was hit by a pitch in the ninth.

The Blue Jays broke a 1-1 tie against rookie Dwight Bernard in the bottom of the eighth when Jim Mason singled, Ron Fairly walked and designated hitter Sam Ewing doubled them both home.

Carols Lopez drove in five runs with a single, double and his third home run in two days to lead Seattle. Luis Delgado added three hits, including a homer, and four RBIs, and Frank MacCormack contributed three innings of one-hit ball in Arizona winds of up to 30 miles an hour.

Friday scores:

SIX ISLAND SQUADS IN BANTAM TOURNEY

By Numbers, the odds favor the British Columbia bantam girls' basketball championship remaining on Vancouver Island.

Six of the eight teams entered in the provincial tournament, which got under way this morning at Claremont High, are from the Island. The Mainland's only representatives are Salmon Arm and Castlegar.

Lake Cowichan won the title last year.

The tournament winds up Sunday with semi-finals at 3 p.m. and the final at 6 p.m. If a playoff is required Sunday, it will be played at 8.

Lofty Celebrity Golf Goal

A new format and the addition of "interested helpers" has prompted organizers to set up a lofty new goal for the third annual Celebrity Heart Fund golf tournament this year.

Professionals and a sponsor have joined the B.C. Heart Foundation, Team Canada Hockey College and Uplands Golf Club in the fund-raising affair to be held July 24.

As a result, Cowichan professional and tournament chairman Bill Wakeham set $10,000 as the 1977 target.

Celebrities such as television personality Mike Douglas and 32 selected hockey players are expected to help the organizers reach their goal. Inaugurated modestly as an amateur affair, the tournament raised $1,200 in 1975. Last year, the Heart Foundation realized $2,300.

The decision of Carling O'Keefe Breweries to sponsor and help promote the event is the major reason organizers have set this year's goal of $10,000.

Carlings started it off by unveiling three impressive new trophies Friday, including the "Vaughan Trapp Memorial Trophy" that will be awarded to the low pro.

A professional at Port Angeles and son of Victoria Golf Club pro Paul Trapp, Vaughan died last year of complications after a kidney operation.

Douglas, said Team Canada College director Neil Crockett, will participate "if he isn't taping a show at that time." Crockett also said players such as Bobby Orr, Peter Mahovlich, Dale Tallon and Danny Gare, all of whom participated last year, are expected again.

Teams will be composed of one professional, one celebrity and three other golfers. There is a limit of 32 fivesomes.

Golfers will pay $50 each to participate.

Uplands, as the host club that has taken a very active role in the fund-raising event — the largest tournament of its kind in Canada — is guaranteed 32 starting spots.

Wakeham anticipates "no problem" in attracting a full field. "I've got promises and cheques from 11 of my (Cowichan) members, and I know two Winnipeg golfers who want to fly in for the weekend."

Applications and gallery tickets will be available in all pro shops.

HUGE LAWSUIT AIMED AT IOC

NEW YIRK (AP) — The Satra Corp., already suing NBC in connection with negotiations for rights to the 1980 Moscow Olympics, filed a separate $275 million lawsuit Friday against the International Olympic Committee in New York Supreme Court.

Harvey Rubin, president of Satra, said the suit charges the IOC with deceit. but declined to be more specific.

Satra, an international trading company with an extensive background of dealings with the Russians, was among the bidders for United States broadcast rights to the Summer Olympics in Moscow. At one point, Satra announced it had signed an agreement with the Russians for the Games, but the Russians said it was not binding.

NBC eventually won the rights for $85 million. Satra then sued the network for interfering with Satra's interests. Rubin said a decision is pending on the earlier suit.

When NBC and the Russians officially signed contracts for the Olympics, an IOC spokesman said that the committee would not approve any deal with Satra because it is not a recognized network.

Satra has never clearly stated what it planned to do with the Games if it won them. The company said it was representing two media organizations, later identified as Viacom and MGM, in dealings with the Russians.

Clippers in Squeaker

By Canadian Press

Nanaimo Clippers and Kelowna Buckaroos won their British Columbia Junior Hockey League quarter-final series Friday night — the Clippers in a squeaker and the Bucks in a laugher.

In Nanaimo, Mike Shields scored twice to lead the Clippers past Abbotsford Flyers 4-2 — the final Clipper counter was scored into an empty net — while Rick Bennigshof scored three in Kelowna to help the Bucks blast Merritt Centennials 12-5.

Both clubs won their best-of-seven encounters in five games. The Clippers meet Langley Lords in a best-of-seven semi-final that starts Sunday in Nanaimo. Kelowna other semi, starting Sunday in Kelowna.

George Fritz and Kelly Short added the other Nanaimo goals. Short's marker came when the Flyers pulled goalie Larry Lozinski for a sixth attacker. Lindsay Johnson and Larry Melnyk were the Abbotsford Marksmen.

Soccer Clubs Delay Freedom Decision

LONDON (AP) — English League soccer clubs have delayed a decision on one of the most controversial proposals in the game's history — a move to change the century-old system of players' contracts.

For the moment players still will be tied to their clubs, barred from moving from one team to another unless a transfer fee is paid.

The Professional Footballers' Association (PFA) — the player's union — has pressed for a new deal that would enable its members to play for whichever club they choose once their contracts have expired.

The management committee of the league reached agreement with the PFA. But the clubs were sharply divided in their reactions and deferred a vote until the annual meeting of the league next June.

If the plan is approved, it will change the whole pattern of league football in England.

PFA leaders long have denounced the present system as a form of slavery. Every club slaps a transfer value on its players — anything ranging from two hundred pounds to three hundred thousand pounds — and no player can play for another club unless it buys him for the stipulated amount, even though his contract has expired.

The PFA wants players to be completely free to sign contracts with any team of their choice. It suggested a system of compensation to be paid by one club to another in cases where a player's contract is not completed.

The PFA did not lose the battle. It is to have further talks with the league before the June meeting.

"The league has previously said it is in favor of freedom of choice for players once their contracts end," said league secretary Alan Hardaker. "But a number of details are causing problems.

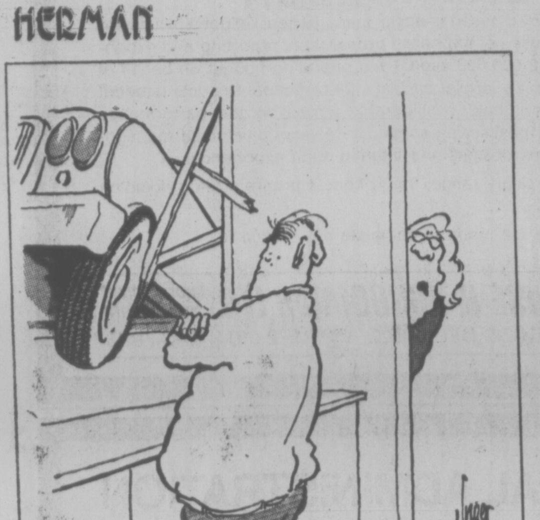
"For some people it is one thing and for others it is another thing. That is why we are continuing talks and hoping to get the details to everyone's satisfaction."

Transfer values likely are to be shaken to pieces if the new deal goes through. A new star will no longer be valued at two hundred thousand pounds if he is free to go off and play for someone else anyway.

Derek Dougan, former Northern Irish international who is chairman of the PFA, appealed to clubs to look seriously at the proposals.

"The PFA wants this change for the good of the game as a whole," Dougan said.

"We aim to give greater stability, remove the insecurity for clubs and improve the situation for eveyone concerned. We aim to have an expanding, thriving industry rather than a contracting one."



"I'll leave you to park the car, I'm going to bed."

Grahame Stretches String of Victories

By The Canadian Press

Birmingham Bulls did what they had to do again Friday night and stayed in the hunt for the fourth and final playoff spot in the World Hockey Association Eastern Division.

For the second time in three nights, the Bulls downed New England Whalers on Birmingham ice. This time 15,112 fans cheered the Bulls on to a 6-3 victory in the sweltering Jefferson County Civic Centre.

The victory, following a 4-3 triumph over New England Wednesday night, pulled Birmingham within seven points. The Bulls have the benefit of three games in hand.

In other games, Houston Aeros won their 17th consecutive game on home ice, a league record, with a 5-0 triumph over Cincinnati Stingers and Winnipeg Jets dumped Calgary Cowboys 4-1.

"I bet we lost 10 pounds per man out there," said Birmingham coach Pat Kelly, commenting on the humid conditions. "I think the temperature was a plus for our team. We still had our legs at the end."

The Bulls fell behind 3-2 in the first period, but got stronger as the game went on, scoring three unanswered goals in the second period and the only goal of the third by Tim Sheehy into an empty net.

Sheehy scored two goals for Birmingham, his 37th and 38th. Peter Marrin, Dale Hoganson, Vaclav Nedomanskyy and Lou Nistico ,with the fifth Birmingham goal at 19:23 of the second period, counted singles for the Bulls.

"I missed a few games earlier this year with a groin injury," said Grahame, who recorded his tenth consecutive victory. "I felt better than I have in a long time tonight and the defence played well in front of me."

Tonelli opened the scoring for Houston with his 21st goal of the season in the first period and combined with Gordie Howe to extend Houston's lead to 3-0 in the second.

Gray added two goals in a 51-second interval in the third period.

Tough Game For Titans

Spectrum put on a strong surge late in the second half and the Titans had to hang on for a 22-15 victory in the high school rugby game at Spectrum.

Vic High, which is unbeaten in 11 games, led 14-3 at the half.

Fergy Eighth In Windy Test

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Victoria rookie professional Cec Ferguson picked up $600 Friday for an eighth-place finish in an American Golf Tour tournament marred by wind and cold weather.

Ferguson, who had rounds of 73, 78 and 74 finished four shots behind the winner, Mike Davis, who carded a five-over-par 221 total on the 7,300-yard, par-72 course.

Sub-par scoring was almost an impossibility on all three days. Winds Friday, for example, gusted to about 50 miles-per-hour and the temperature hovered around 40 degrees Fahrenheit (5 Celsius).

Ferguson's 78 on Thursday was the third best score of the day.

Second Win For Norway

TOKYO (Reuter) — Norway overcame a two-goal deficit to defeat Switzerland 4-3 Friday in a world hockey Group B championship game.

Cramming for 'exam hell,' Japanese learn by rote beginning in kindergarten

Exam Mania Grips Japan

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
New York Times

TOKYO — It is gruelling, it is expensive, it is frightening. It supports a vast industry and causes sleepless nights, ulcers and suicides.

It is shiken jigoku, literally exam hell, an eight-week period of Japan's winter when almost 900,000 young men and a much smaller number of young women sit for day-long university entrance examinations that, largely regardless of later academic performance, will determine the courses of their careers and lives.

Hour after hour, every day now in thousands of college classrooms, the teenagers laboriously check off multiple-choice answers to questions that some have been learning by rote since kindergarten.

Nearby, many mothers wait patiently as mothers have so many times outside special "cram" schools that prepare children for these crucial days. Tokuhiro Yamashita, an 18-year-old student, was asked why he wanted to attend a university. In Japan, his mother replied for him, "college is the ultimate. You can't do anything without graduating from a good college." Then she adjourned the sidewalk interview indoors, to get her son in out of the cold.

Such maternal concern has spawned a giant education industry in Japan to help assure a youngster's acceptance by "proper" and "prestigious" schools, from kindergartens through universities. Every college student has taken at least five major entrance examinations at various school levels. To help, a network of publishers, tutors and special schools, too, require entrance exams.

The system was devised a century ago to assure democratic educational opportunities for all Japanese, not just the fuedal aristocracy. But recently the system has drawn criticism for emphasizing conformity, putting excessive pressure on children and fostering a lack of originality and imagination. There have been no real reforms.

Since there are 880,000 applicants this year for the 600,000 openings at the 940 colleges and universities of prestige-conscious Japan, competition remains as keen as ever.

Each school and division has its own exams in mathematics, science, history, geography, English, modern and classical Japanese and other specialized subjects. To win at least one placement in college, each student takes a number of exams, sometimes as many as a dozen. The applicants travel all over Japan, sometimes on group flights, to try, for example, for a university in Kyoto, then in Sendai and Tokyo.

Some hotels offer special "examination plans." The New Otani here in Tokyo, where young Yamashita is staying, has single rooms for $52 a night and, for $76, accommodations for a student and his mother.

The price includes two meals "specially designed for easy digestion," access to a trio of student counselors, a map of Tokyo showing all colleges and transportation routes, and use of a student lounge equipped with dictionaries, pencil sharpeners, hot tea and cold soft drinks.

Also included are graffiti wallboards to relieve tensions ("Yes I can," one student scribbled in English). Doctors and dentists are on call, and special "midnight study snacks" are available from room service.

About 3,500 students, a third accompanied by their mothers, will use the plan of the New Otani, which is part of a chain founded by the late Yonetaro Otani, an illiterate former wrestler and sake salesman who never went to college.

The Yamashitas will spend more than $1,000 during their 10-day stay in Tokyo. On days when there are no exams, Mrs. Yamashit's son rises at 7 to study in the room, with breaks only for meals. His mother sits nearby reading classical novels. When he walks through doors, she holds them for him.

"I want my son to be successful at this point in his life," she said. "Since the moment he was born I have wanted him to go to college." Like most Japanese mothers, she has shouldered by far the greater part of her children's upbringing.

Mothers here carry their children virtually everywhere until the children are about five years old. For five years, Mrs. Yamashita has set aside some grocery money every week to pay college costs, which can amount to $5,000 to $6,000 a year. Some schools require additional "donations."

Mrs. Yamashita did not insist on a "cram school" for Tokuhiro, who is her eldest son, although his brother, a junior high school student, attends one. But since October she has monitored Tokuhiro's non-stop studies. "At midnight," she said, "I would fix him a snack. And often when I awoke the next morning he was still studying. My son enjoys the preparation."

Not everyone does. "I was forced to go to cram school," said Shinya Moriyama, 19. "I was always studying for college even though I wish I could have played more outside in the fields." Moriyama, whose father owns a furniture store, wants to attend college because "I don't want to start working yet."

"In Japan," said Yoshiyuki Nomura, 19, another university hopeful, "the college years are the only time when a Japanese can enjoy himself. Before then, there is no free time. You have to prepare for college.

"After college there is no free life. You must work hard at your job and do things you don't want to do."

For Japanese women, the opportunities are even more limited. Yukari Kat's mother accompanied her to Tokyo, but then returned to their rural home to shepherd another child through high school-entrance exams. "My dream," said the 19-year-old Miss Kato, "is to be a translator. Sometimes I sit in the movies and try to translate them like a professional."

She has seen how few females take university exams. "Japanese women who go to a four-year college and have a profession become too strong-minded and the Japanese men don't like that."

"I want so to have a career. But I am afraid I will be strong like that. And anyway, you hear how hard it is for Japanese women to have a career. I don't know. I'm not sure. Maybe I will just quit my studies and go into the business of being a housewife."

Taxmen Checking Interest

OTTAWA (CP) — The revenue department announced Thursday it is cracking down on persons who fail to report taxable interest earnings from federal, provincial and municipal bonds.

The department said in a news release that residents who cash bond interest coupons will in future be required either to provide a social insurance number or pay a 25-per-cent withholding tax on cashed coupons.

Canada Savings Bonds will be the chief type of bond affected.

The measures are provided for in recently-approved amendments to the Income Tax Act. But a revenue spokesman said it will probably be about three months before proper forms are prepared and the provision goes into effect.

"This new procedure has become necessary because some taxpayers have not been reporting the full amount of bond interest payments," the release said. There is no estimate, however, of how much tax has been evaded.

Fishing Rules Hem in Japanese

By ROBERT WHYMANT
Manchester Guardian

TOKYO — The Japanese are being officially exhorted to like sardines, so far an object of disdain, as traditional fishing grounds and hauls of more favored species of fish are whittled down by other countries' 200-mile economic zones.

The switch, which is being promoted by the government through television cookery programs and posters, is not at all to the taste of a nation of discriminating fish consumers.

A sense of being victimized is apparent at various levels of the fish debate that preoccupies Japanese — who derive half their animal protein intake from marine resources — more deeply than Western beef-eaters.

Nearly half of the 10 million tons landed by Japanese fishing boats last year was caught within 200 miles of other people's coasts. Close to 20 per cent came from waters within Canada's zone — proclaimed at the beginning of the year — and that which the United States will implement on March 1. An even greater percentage is derived from the "exclusive economic zone" the Soviet Union is expected to enforce at any time.

Some observers feel that the psychological effects of a perceived narrowing of Japan's food-hunting grounds are more serious than any actual drop in eating standards can be. They point out that Japan's own 200-mile zone stretching round this long string of islands is the seventh largest such zone in the world. Japan has chosen not to adopt the exclusive economic zone, not least because it is reluctant to see China and South Korea take a similar step.

ART CHARGE UNFAIR

Tory Leader Scott Wallace said today he regretted his use of the word corrupt Wednesday in connection with a B.C. government art committee.

"But I still think it's unethical," Wallace said.

The Tory leader attacked the NDP-appointed committee for buying some of the works of its own members. He told the legislature Wednesday that the committee's actions were unethical and possibly corrupt.

But he admitted today that the corruption charge was "unfair to use under the circumstances."

The art committee was established in 1974 to buy art-works to decorate provincial buildings and museums and for display around the province.

The dock is the renovated Pier 69 which also will have office space for the Marguerite's staff. Shops and restaurants will be on its ground and second floors.

The renovated pier has a skybridge linking it to the exhibitors' centre of the trade centre, scheduled to open in June.

British Columbia developers in co-operation with Seattle are converting the former American Can Company building at the northern end of the city's waterfront into a five-storey garden court.

This month's issue of the Reporter, a trade journal for the port of Seattle, describes the new trade centre as "the first major merchandise mart and exhibition centre in the Pacific Northwest."

Four Canadians are among the owners and developers.

They are Irving Kates, a clothing manufacturer's agent with offices in Vancouver; Leon Kalhn, president of the Vancouver Showmart and a real estate developer; Joseph Segal, president of the Canadian department store chain Fields Stires, and Alan Waisman, president of Vancouver's Waisman Architectural Group.

'White Man's Poison'

WINNIPEG (CP) — In the Whitedog Indian reserve of Northwestern Ontario, the health problem befuddling federal and provincial authorities is industrial mercury that lurks unseen in the English river waterways.

But it was another chemical — in plastic bottles and clearly labelled poison — that killed five residents last weekend.

"It was still white man's poison," one young Indian said bitterly.

The story of the fatal drinking party is told by Winnipeg Tribune reporter Stephen Riley after a series of interviews at the reserve north of Kenora.

Among those he talked with were two teenage boys who drank only small amounts of the gasoline antifreeze and survived the tragic ordeal.

"It tasted like whiskey" Perry Kejick, 14, who took only a single drink, said of the liquid that resulted in the death of his mother, Josephine, 41; Darlene Michaud, 19; Lawrence Land, 38; Doris Carpenter and Mary Louise Smith.

Elizabeth Land was the sales clerk at the store who sold the fatal solution to her uncle, Lawrence, and others. She said she sold a total of eight of the 16-ounce, 69-cent bottles.

Harvin Smith, 14-year-old son of Mary Louise Smith, said he and Howard Scott, 10, were at the Kejick house about 3 p.m. last Friday when the drinking began.

He went back later with his mother and father.

"Lawrence was there and he had one of those bottles of that stuff," Harvin recalled. "He said 'This stuff is good to drink, we should get some more.' My father said to me, 'Go get one bottle for me,' and he gave me $10."

Howard mixed the antifreeze with water, straining the fluid through a cloth into a big, metal cup that was passed around.

Harvin said he read the label that said "poison" but he drank it anyway.

What followed as the afternoon wore on remains uncertain as to time and place. But the adults continued drinking while Harvin, Howard and George Kejick, 16, slept and Perry was babysitting.

At about 2:45 a.m., Perry's sister Diane, 18, arrived from the Kejick home supporting a friend, Darlene Michaud.

"Diane was sober but Darlene was really drunk," said Perry.

One of the younger children playing outside told a patrolling policemen that a woman was sick in the house and that sparked a hurried rescue attempt.

Nine people, including the three teenagers, were rushed to Kenora hospital and the adults were then immediately transferred to Winnipeg. The next day, Sunday, four of them were dead.

On Monday, Mary Louise Smith died.

Domain of Wily Coyote Ranges from Sea to Sea

By JIM ROBB
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Nobody knows exactly how many coyotes there are in Canada. But Canis Latrans has become the country's most ubiquitous migrant.

In a word, or two, the scrawny, fleabitten, yelpy native of the tall grass prairies is now found everywhere.

Bursting out of his western range, the coyote's domain now stretches from sea to sea, from the United States border to the Arctic.

If trapping statistics are any indication, the coyote population, while fluctuating, is expanding as well as spreading out.

In 1974-75 the number of pelts taken hit a high of 87,139. This past year the number trapped decreased somewhat, to 61,779. In 1973-74 the number taken was 78,000, the year previous it was 46,500.

The word that best describes the willy mammal is "adaptability."

And the trapping yield, despite its fluctuations, indicates the coyote population is in a healthy state, Dr. N. S. Novakowski of the Canadian Wildlife Directorate, said in an interview.

Novakowski said the animal has adapted to many habitats, including urban living. A pack has foraged, mated and multiplied atop Montreal's Mount Royal for some years now. Western communities take the urban coyote for granted.

And it has moved in on Arctic terrain that was formerly the preserve of wolves, he said.

The number being trapped today to provide fur trim for parkas, coats and jackets is far above the number turned in for bounties when the animal was considered vermin and not a fur-bearing resource.

Back in 1947, Novakiwski said, 24,000 were trapped, before the coyote was elevated to a higher status.

The coyote's diet is as varied as the regions he lives in. On the prairies his favorite dish is ground squirrel or gopher. In the east it is rabbits and rodents.

In sheep country he dotes on new-born lamb. In the United States, Dr. Novakowski said, the annual lamb kill by hungry coyotes is estimated at two million or more each year.

There is no record of coyotes attacking people, although they frighten children with their howls, the federal biologist said.

The coyote explosion began a long time ago, he said. It started with the decimation of the bison herds that once roamed as far east as the western fringe of the Great Lakes.

The Great Plains wolf that lived off the herds declined with the end of the buffalo and the ecological void was filled by the adaptable coyote.

The coyote population is growing naturally and through hybridization with dogs and timber wolves, the biologist noted.

The animal is in no danger of being declared an endangered species, he went in. The coyote is just too smart.

In the United States the coyote is now found in every state but Hawaii, and he has gone south as far as Panama.

Parks, Schools Combine Effort

Saanich parks department will co-operate with Greater Victoria school board on mutual maintenance of parks and school sports fields in a cost-cutting experiment.

Parks administrator Frank Andrews said Friday it is a pilot project for the municipality and will involve Ambassador Park and Lambrick school.

"When we have our men and equipment in the area it's only simple logic we should do the work," he said. "The money is coming out of the same pocket, that of the taxpayer, so why shouldn't we try and effect a saving?"

If successful, the program will be extended, Andrews said.

Andrews said change rooms at Braefoot Park will be completed at a cost of $57,000 this year but an extension to change rooms at Lambrick Park has yet to be approved.

He is hoping to improve facilities for junior football and tennis and says many of Saanich's playing fields, developed 15 years ago by using hog fuel as landfill need work.

"The fields now are sinking and the fuel decomposing. These things are now coming back to haunt us," he said.

Andrews said Glanford, Braefoot and Lochside Parks need such work. Problems at Hampton and Prospect Lake Parks were rectified in 1976.

Donors Perform Miracles

Behold the blood donor — relaxing on a cot while about seven per cent of his or her blood supply drains painlessly into a pint-sized plastic bottle.

In 10 or 15 minutes it's done. Time for free coffee, a soft drink and cookies and the donor is on his way.

Twenty-four hours later and the donor's body will have replenished its blood fluid. Meanwhile the blood donation will have been split in a laboratory into elements which come close to being miracle drugs.

Gone are the days when it was simply a case of siphoning the blood out of donor and into patient.

Blood has many component, each with a job to do. Red cells carry oxygen and wastes, white cells attack disease and infection, platelets help stop bleeding.

About 55 per cent of blood volume is a straw-colored liquid called plasma, rich in many proteins. If someone has suffered severe burns, plasma alone can keep his body from drying out. Later, concentrated red cells will help heal.

When plasma itself is divided up, such fractions as cryopreipitate emerge. It contains factor 8, indispensable in treating hemophiliacs. These "bleeders" can now enjoy near-normal lives and even undergo what formerly would have been impossible surgery.

Another plasma fraction, gamma globulin, contains the antibodies to increase immunity against such diseases as German measles, poliomylitis, mumps and hepatitis. Serum albumin is invaluable in fighting shock from loss of blood.

DAILY CLINICS

Blood donor clinics in Greager Victoria will be held daily next week.

Monday the clinic will be at Red Cross House, 1046 Fort, from 2:30 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Tuesday through Thursday clinics will be at the University of Victoria's Student Union Building, from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Friday's clinic will be at Oak Bay senior secondary school, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

For more information, phone 382-2213.

Meals Continue

VANCOUVER (CP) — The United Way will not allow the Meals on Wheels program here to be discontinued later this year because of lack of funds, the organization said in a news release.

The program, carried out by the Victoria Order of Nurses and involving more than 600 volunteers, last year provided 92,000 hot meals to people in their homes.

Warm or cold, Garmisch a mountain playground

By PHILIP SOUSA

GARMISCH-PARTENKIRCHEN — Something I read in a brochure while on the flight to Germany provided an insight to this Bavarian resort's unique personality and attributes.

After explaining that the twin-town community at the foot of the country's tallest mountain has a convention centre equipped for meetings of up to 2,000 persons, the folder said:

"The inauguration music, if desired, will be played by the Municipal Symphonic Orchestra."

Well, not even a lone fiddler was on hand the other day when I eased to a stop here after a snowy but otherwise delightful one-hour drive from Munich. Yet, entering this Bavarian poster-come-to-life was sheer music.

Picturesque old homes, sporting flowery balconies and wide eaves, stately churches with slim belfries piercing the clean air, lots of trees and gardens, smiling people. True, stuff you find elsewhere in Germany's south. But here it all takes on added poignancy and the reason is the mighty Alps all around.

An awesome array of great mountains practically encircle Garmisch — the usual way outsiders refer to this place. Two of the peaks are famous for their beauty, altitude, superb ski runs and miles of footpaths; west of town the 9,721-foot Zugspitze, Germany's tallest, and even closer the resort, 8,619-foot Alpspitze.

Most of the time in winter and always the rest of the year, both giants are clearly visible from almost any point in the city.

Long considered by many as Germany's capital of both winter and summer fun, Garmisch became a major vacation destination in 1889 with completion of its rail link to Munich.

Popular as ever, the train — with several runs daily in each direction — remains an ideal means for reaching either city, particularly for those who'd rather leave the driving to others.

From October through June, good and steady snowfalls turn the region into a mecca for winter sports lovers. No fewer than 42 cable cars and ski lifts make it easy for skiers to sample at least a few of the 58 miles of well-kept runs in the city's backyard.

You can — and should — get to the top of the Zugspitze even if you are a nonskier. The Eibsee cable car will whisk you nonstop to the summit in a scant 10 minutes; or, for a longer scenic journey, you can take the cogwheel train for the hour-long ride from the Garmisch train station to the Schneefernerhaus Hotel and switch there to a cable car for the four-minute trip to the summit.

At the Zugspitze's crown there's a small restaurant, a gift shop and a terrace from which you can view a forest of glaciers and peaks belonging to no less than four countries: Germany, Austria, Italy and Switzerland. Walk a few steps from the terrace past a small border post and you're on Austrian soil; on that spot is a shop where you can buy souvenirs and taste several Tyrolean drinks and foods.

The region boasts 185 miles of alpine footpaths; there are nearby lakes with facilities for water skiing, sailing and swimming; in town you'll find Alpspitz-Wellenbad, an impressive complex of indoor and outdoor swimming pools and saunas; next-door is the Olympic ice stadium, one of the largest and most attractive facilities of its kind in Europe (two outdoor rinks and one indoor rink open year-round, ice shows, hockey matches, curling, the Olympic ski stadium with its ski jumps and bobsled courses; and a host of spa installations for treatment of blood circulation debility, respiratory disorders and neuro-vegetative problems and other ailments.

You can go boating on the Eibsee, golfing on several courses, and even white-water canoeing on the Loisach River.

Active or lazy, winter or summer, your holiday here need not be limited to outdoor or sporting activities. Garmisch has a small but attractive casino whose roulette and baccarat tables start humming with activity at 3 p.m. every day. There's an excellent Peasant Theatre. Lots of handicrafts, too, especially wood-carving. Cozy beer taverns, nightclubs and even a couple of discos offer opportunities to meet locals and Germans from other corners of the nation. And you'll find a number of good restaurants offering both regional specialties and international fare.

The nightmare express: Reserve for Eurailpass

SAN FRANCISCO — "When the girl at the Paris reservation desk heard my Alliance Francaise French, she shut the wicket, put up a 'closed' sign and sat there sullenly until I went away."

Some people swear by Eurailpass. Some swear at it. One month of unlimited train travel in 13 countries of Europe. First-class, $260. Hop off in charming villages. Charm the charming villagers. Hop back on again.

"Best thing about Eurailpass is you only have to stand in one line: Reservations. Otherwise you line up to buy tickets. Then line up to reserve a seat.

"If you don't reserve, people already on will do anything short of murder to keep compartments to themselves. They lie across three seats and pretend to be asleep — or maybe dead.

"They wag their fingers angrily if you try to open the door. They pile luggage on the seat and tell you the occupant has gone to the bathroom."

Where have all the porters gone? Used to be plenty of porters. Now — "We saw only one porter in a month of travel. Figure to carry your bags."

(If you do get a porter, he will put your bags in your compartment. But he will not come on to take them off. You have to lower the window and throw them out. Hard on luggage if there's no porter to catch them.)

On the good side: "The trains are great if they're the famous TEE jobs. (Trans Europ Express.) The Mistral between Paris and the French Riviera. The Settebello from Rome to Milan. The Edelweiss from Amsterdam to Italy. The Rosenkavalier Express between Munich and Vienna.

"When you're not on a TEE, brace yourself."

"We were drinking caffe espresso topped with almond whipped cream at the hotel in Rapallo when the waiter told us all Italian trains were being struck at midnight. Decided we'd better head for France.

"Rushed to the station. Hauled baggage down the platform looking for first-class. Finally got on second-class, planning to work our way to first.

"Even in winter, second-class is jammed throughout the aisles. Burping babies. Bundled belongings. Knots of soccer fans. Conductor said we were on right train but wrong car. This one splitting for Milan."

European trains constantly take off cars to join other trains. I lost my glasses getting off a train in Germany. The entire railroad system couldn't trace where that car went.

Our reporter finally made the right car by jumping off at stations, running forward a few cars and leaping on again. "We did this three times. Scary because doors close electrically. And the train stops only a few minutes.

"If you want to wrinkle-proof your travel, take only TEE trains. And you must have reservations: 24 hours in advance is safest. Then you must find a town large enough to merit a computerized reservation machine. And one that isn't broken."

We've decided the best way is to make all reservations before you go. And the best way is by reading "Eurail-Guide — How To Travel Europe By Train". Paperback sells for $5.95 in bookstores. Gives a complete how-to-do-it.

Travel Tips

By STAN DELAPLANE

Get educated before you go. On-the-job training is for heroes.

My own experience: If you get a porter, there's a minimum trip. French porters sneer at whatever you give them. Correct you ferociously if it is not up to standard.

Seville beyond superlatives

By PHILIP SOUSA

SEVILLE — Spain's most festive town is where most visitors run out of superlatives.

Try it.

Ask anyone who has stood atop the 793-year-old La Giralda Tower and taken in the canvas of whitewashed houses, red roof tiles and green trees all around.

Ask anyone who's stepped inside the Gothic Cathedral, the country's largest, and pause to admire the sword of King Fernando the Saint, Murillo's and Goya's paintings, the coffin of King Pedro the Cruel, the massive tomb of Christopher Columbus.

Ask anyone who's strolled along Calle de las Sierpes, the Street of Serpents, and found a world of dancers, singers, musicians and other lively, noisy characters.

Ask anyone who's been to Barrio de Santa Cruz, the old Jewish Quarter, and wandered through the alleys locals call streets, feasting the eye with a profusion of flowery garden patios behind countless wrought-iron doors, bougainvillea-laden balconies festooned with the day's laundry, elaborate lamps thrusting out of white-washed walls as old as the neighborhood is romantic.

Ask anyone who's allowed enough time for that fabled Arabian palace on San Tomas Street, the 14th century Alcazar with its exquisite Hunters', Maidens' and Dolls' courts.

Ask anyone who has been here for a bullfight, for Holy Week or the Spring Fair. Ask anyone who's been here, period.

Ask and you'll hear words such as elegant, sensuous, historic, happy, friendly, fragrant and beautiful.

Yes, Seveille is all of that. And more.

Interestingly, Seville is no quaint village maintained to impress the millions who drop by every year, but rather a thriving port city with a population in excess of 600,000.

Among its many virtues, I believe, is an obvious ability to live quite comfortably with its many historic riches while going ahead with the business of being an important part of this century's Spain.

Though only a few miles from the glittering — and rather plastic — Costa del Sol and its attendant high-rise hotels, charter crowds and hamburger stands, Seville retains most of the worthwhile characteristics of the Andalusian region of which it is the unofficial capital.

This area, Spain's southernmost, is a sun-drenched belt of mostly arid land sprinkled with villages laden with the dust of history and ageless towns like Cordoba, Granada and Seville, a region where respect for tradition pervades life and where everything man does, he does to the sound of music.

As you roam about town you'll find plenty of opportunities to sample both the Andalusians' traditional hospitality and their renowned cuisine; you'll want to taste gazpacho, the cold vegetable soup, the area's famed anchovies, the superb Trevelez ham, the outstanding seafood from the nearby Mediterranean and, of course, the delicious Andalusian wines, especially the famous jerez.

There's something else you should ask anyone who's ever been here.

Would you return?

The universal answer, I am sure, will be a definite, yes!

Weather Won't Hurt B.C. Logging

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — The above-average temperatures this winter will not cripple the central interior B.C. logging industry, as was thought, earlier.

Loggers in the area had expressed concern several weeks ago that warm temperatures would make roads too soft to facilitate log-hauling.

Dennis Thompson of the B.C. Independent Logging Association said Thursday the weather has been cool enough for loggers to fulfill their contracts. He said they have been hauling logs at night and in the early morning when the roads are frozen.

That will allow loggers to finish up at the same time as other years, Thompson said.

The logging season in the central interior is usually completed by the end of March.

Hot-water safari to darkest Africa

By JIM BISHOP

NAIROBI, Kenya — It's less than seven miles south of the equator in the heart of Africa and they're passing out the hot water bottles.

This African incongruity is an evening regular ritual at the new kind of big-game safari centres which are springing up high on the slopes of Robert Ruark's Mt. Kenya, Hemingway's Mt. Kilimanjaro, or on the rolling emerald-green plains of Kenya's Tsavo, or Serengeti National Park, Mkomazi, or Masai Mara Game Reserves, and the giant Ngorongoro Game Controlled Area.

In comfortable lodges hidden deep in the shadows of giant rain forest trees, tourists and animal and bird lovers from all over the world now eyeball their favorite fauna from a few feet away through thick plate-glass windows.

Typical of where old-fashioned hot water bottles are being passed out each evening for visitors who want to sit outside and enjoy the late, late animal show is The Mountain Lodge, 7,200 feet up on 17,068-foot-high Mt. Kenya.

The lodge is less than two hours' drive by rental car north of Nairobi, Kenya's sparkling capital. Eighty of the 100 miles is on paved "tarmac," much of it divided highway. The last 20 miles is on an easy red dirt road that flows over rolling hills speckled with tan, round, thatched-roof huts crouched under a gentle rain of purple jacaranda blossoms.

Tea plantations trace a lacy pattern over the slopes.

Government trout hatcheries, which provide dinner delights for lodge visitors, lie in long green valleys. Just before arriving at the lodge, the brick red road dips deep into the grean cathedral walls and high arched ceiling of the rain forest.

Lodge visitors' weapons and stalking procedures have no connection with a Hemingway hero. The travellers, ranging from Europeans travelling en famille with small children to U.S. teenagers, South American honeymooners and retired Britishers and Italians, carry no big game guns. They now sight their prey through the viewfinders of everything from a $15 Kodak Instamatic to a $5,000 Nikon with so many lenses attached it's almost as long as the elephant gun it's replacing.

The click of the camera is drowning out the roar of the rifle. The color photograph is succeeding the skin or tusk on the floor or wall at home.

If you're a real back-bushman, the old-type safaris with modern adaptions such as six-place Cessnas instead of traditional Land Rovers to get the serious hunter to the far-off hunting horizons still are going strong.

Sternly supervised by the government, these safaris can take only so many of any particular variety of prescribed and protected game.

Most species of any but the fastest-reproducing African wildlife are not totally protected from anyone in Kenya except the ever-present poacher from neighboring Uganda or Somali, or any local four-footed resident who is a little quicker with tooth and claw.

But contact with Africa's animals, birds and reptiles has been maintained for the average person by The Mountain Lodge and similar game-viewing centres all over Kenya.

Mountain Lodge is literally part of the rain forest. A little mongoose zips up a tree over the water hole and without hesitating makes an Olympic long-jump to one of the lodge balconies.

Birds perch on the balcony railings, peck away at the food put out for them on tree trunk platforms and swirl and swoop over the water holes.

A chart in the lodge lobby lists 164 species of feathered fliers. Any new bird spied gets the sharp-eyed watcher a free drink at the bar. Every so often a freebie is earned and served.

Just before twilight, inside the lodge, tall and quietly humorous lodge manager Michael Goodwin, who grew up in the London jungles of the Westminster District, gives a short ham-on-wry prologue of the coming night's attractions to the guests.

Visitors can't arrive before 4:30 p.m. and have to be on their way by 9:30 the next morning. The lodge can't afford to have daytime guests destroying the carefully guarded atmosphere; no near-sighted tourists poking a nose into a cheetah's mouth or noisy children wearing T-shirts with Kenya printed on them chasing the animals or vice-versa.

Goodwin punctures an illusion or two in his remarks. "Yes," he says, "you'll probably see a rhino tonight. Maybe even what we call a white one. But 'white' is a misnomer. The word comes from 'weid,'' a Dutch Afrikaner word meaning wide mouth and not relating to color."

And speaking of the orthodontist's biggest failure, the curved tusked warthog, Goodwin says they get so big an Italian hunter recently shot one thinking it was a water buffalo.

The Mountain Lodge, Goodwin continues, is on a 300,000-square-mile game preserve and has been open since 1971. The constant creaks and groans of the graceful building are no cause for alarm, he says. It's the all-wood construction of the lodge which is the largest building in Kenya constructed entirely of wood.

As he finishes, the visitors move to the big picture window in the bar or to the little viewing balconies that front each room. Hot water bottles and blankets are adjusted. The setting sun, now racing far to the west past Uganda, Lake Victoria and over East Africa on its way to South America, paints the patchy rough top of Mt. Ketnya pink for one magic moment. Then the quick equatorial night drops like a blanket.

Monte Carlo: Las Vegas with class

By NEIL MORGAN

MONTE CARLO — The tourists pay an admission charge and wander through the outer rooms of the casino, sometimes smirking a bit because the pace seems so much quieter than Las Vegas. There's only one crap table, and Prince Rainier's shrewd Monegasque management keeps it there just for fun.

"People visit the casino like a cathedral," says Dario dell'Antonia, the next-door director general of Hotel de Paris, a showplace of baroque era splendor almost as grand as the casino. "The outer rooms of the casino have become a sightseeing place for the medium class."

Ah, but the Monte Carlo casino exists as of old, in the even grander back rooms away from the tour groups and casual tourists. It continues to rack up the highest gross of any European casino. And it achieves this in deafening silence.

I managed my way into the lofty main casino at the rear on a Saturday night in time for a scene that would have made sobbing wretches of the Las Vegas proprietors who muddle their customers with sound and fury and play every angle to extract the last chip.

The big gamblers were seated quietly around a baccarat table. Plaques of 5,000 and 10,000 francs (about $1,000 and $2,000) were standard. There were plenty of 20,000 franc plaques in the game.

Suddenly the game was played out and the players stood, smiling.

"In Vegas," breathed an American voice behind me, "they'd never let them get away that easy!"

As in every casino, a man of cool steel is in charge. On this shift it is the boss, Raymond Franzi, Monaco-born.

The marks of his trade are there. Slightly smoked glasses. Slightly hunched shoulders, relieved by good tailoring. Slightly long hair, slightly gray. An apprentice in the casino at the age of 16, a croupier at 24, and now the managing director.

My guides are the suave Josianne Merino, of the staff of Rainier's Societe des Bains de Mer (which controls the casino and major hotels) and her husband Francis, and so of course M. Franzi is more than slightly aware of our presence.

He moves diffidently toward us, an inquiring eyebrow raised. Josianne nods.

"Perhaps you would care," M. Franzi says, looking slightly toward me, "to visit behind the leather curtain."

He leads. I follow. Even the inner casino has a more inner casino. Behind heavy leather drapes we enter a small casino with tables for baccarat and chemin de fer. And the omnipresent roulette.

It is all deserted.

"For many years it was the English who came to this room," M. Franzi says, a trace of sadness suffusing his face. "For some time, the English do not come so much. Now, more often, the Arabs. It is the private room for the big players."

And where have the English disappeared?

"Alors, monsieur, alors!" he says, regarding me as a newcomer to the planet. "It is the fiscal system. Taxes. The tax authorities look in on us from time to time, even those from London, always searching for big spenders and big winners."

And there are big winners, then? And losers?

M. Franzi looks into my eyes for the first time, dolefully. "But of course it is policy never to discuss a run on the casino, though I may tell you there have been some. Nor to discuss the losses of our clients, though there are some. To us the privacy of our clients is of utmost discretion."

The proper agent of a prince, I think, as he waves for a bottle of champagne to close our conversation.

There is one last question, I beg of him, directing his attention to a dramatic young woman in long black velvet who sits on a stool watching roulette, but more interested in the players than the game.

"The unattached person is allowed?" I ask.

His eyes twinkle merrily for a moment, an international language that answers me entirely. The champagne arrives.

"There are exceptions," he says.

His hand brushes mine, there is the suggestion of a bow, and he moves lightly to the centre of the floor, hands behind his back, suddenly as imperceptible as the walls.

But then at Monte Carlo, even the walls may talk.

Ixtapa Mexico's latest resort jewel

By JACK GREGG

Look inland and see the green, tropical foothills and beyond them the purple outlines of the Sierra Madre del Sur.

Then turn your eyes to the west. Talk about views. Islets float in a sea of startling blue. The sun sinks beyond the rim of the world, heralding the cocktail hour.

Sunny and clean Ixtapa is described by tourist officials as the "New Cancun" — the Pacific coast's answer to the fancy resort at Point Cancun on Mexico's Caribbean shores.

And now is the time for a visit, before Ixtapa is turned into a new Acapulco or a new Puerto Vallarta by invading hordes of tourists.

There are two hotels here, the Aristos, which opened its 226 rooms in March, 1975, and the spanking-new El Presidente Las Palmas, which has just recently opened 250 of its planned 313 rooms.

One other hotel and a condominium are under construction.

"The over-all plan calls for a total of 27 hotels in the next 10 years," said Juan Monzoni, architect for the Ixtapa project.

"We believe the total population for the Zihuatanejo-Ixtapa area will top out at about 70,000. This compares with 350,000 in Acapulco."

Monzoni is an employee of FONATUR, the National Fund for the Promotion of Tourism. He worked for FONATUR on the Cancun project and now is deeply involved in the first phase of Ixtapa.

So far, the project includes:

Six tennis courts and four to be completed soon.

Modern housing for hotel workers and FONATUR employees.

Ixtapa is 125 miles northwest of Acapulco and the two resorts are connected by a modern two-lane highway.

Another road is under construction from Ixtapa to Uruapan, which connects to Mexico City. The drive from the beach community to the nation's capital will take five hours after the road is completed.

The Ixtapa resort area is at Playa Las Palmas, a long stretch of beach with rolling breakers that bring joy to body surfers and surfboarders.

Both hotels are adjacent to the beach, and both offer large swimming pools for those allergic to saltwater.

Stretching northwestward from the Las Palmas beach are several smaller coves, each offering white beaches, an excellent sea view and swimming and snorkeling.

Offshore a mile from the final cove, Playa Quieta, lies Isla Ixtapa, which provides good anchorage for yachts, and has small community, including a seafood restaurant.

In the other direction from the hotels and a 10-minute ride away is Zihuatenejo, a fishing community of 17,000 that has its own lovely beaches, hotels, restaurants and gift shops.

FONATUR has several projects under way in Zihuatanejo, including a new marketplace and an arts-crafts centre.

The approach roads are being widened and cobblestoned, schools, a sports activities centre and a marina are being built and plans are completed for a regional hospital.

Both Ixtapa and Zihuatanejo can provide all types of water sports, including sailboat rentals, deep-sea fishing, diving and snorkeling. The surrounding waters abound in sailfish, marlin, rooster fish, dolphin fish, tuna and red snapper.

Ten minutes inland from Zihuatanejo is a $10-million international jetport which began flight operations in March, 1975.

Both Aeromexico and Mexicana airlines provide service from Mexico City. Flights take approximately 40 minutes. Mexicana has applied for permission to fly directly from Los Angeles to the new resort.

Santa Catalina a sparkler from the past

By CAROL KENDRICK

CATALINA ISLAND — Almost 30 miles — and at least 30 years — away from the streamlined present of Southern California is a little pocket of the past called Avalon.

A tiny jewel set in the crown that is Santa Catalina island, the town of Avalon conjures up an array of fantasies, then sets out with earnest enthusiasm to fulfill them.

Avalon is not the Riviera, nor the Greek isles, nor a Mediterranean fishing village come to life from a full-color travel poster.

But it is close enough to any of those that just squinting into an afternoon sun creates a picture postcard with a stamp from any of a number ports of call.

When the summer resorters revert to the dress and decor that might just be a sojourn into 1936, Avalon is a throng of sun worshippers baking on the beach in coconut oil by day, dancing at the Pavilion to the tunes of the big bands by night, and forever sipping exotic drinks.

Or on an Indian summer day in a fall lingering on, an adventure across the swelling waves gives way to a stroll along the shops, field trips to the outback of an island more varied than it is large.

Those who always mean to make their trips in summer, yet never do, might think of a journey on a clear winter day, when the sun sparkles on the water, or when the gray of the day makes bundling up and venturing out from a Cape Cod cottage the closest a Californian will come to the whims of weather.

1936 was not a bad year — college football rivalries were intense, decadence was the style, and the young couples who swayed at the Pavilion Ballroom to the tune of "Where or When" never heard a big band again without a glimmer of remembrance passing from one to another.

One cannot watch the glamorous ladies of this season, in sharkskin lounging pajamas or strapless gowns, in tunics or riding jackets, without seeing them walking down those same winding streets of Avalon in a time a generation before today's crush and rush.

One cannot see the idlers on their yachts, passing plastic stemware glasses of champagne to the boys who drive by on water taxis . . . dining by candlelight in the cozy quarters of their sailboats, coming ashore in canvas deck shoes, khaki slacks and a blue blazer . . . without seeing that there are little pockets of the day before yesterday thriving beyond the freeways.

Fijiians crack down on vagabond yachts

SUVA, Fiji — A crew of 10 New Zealanders recently paddled a home-made canoe 2,000 miles from the Gilbert Islands to this South Pacific island. They were arrested on a charge of illegal entry when they arrived.

Fiji and other South Pacific islands are tightening up on what they regard as wandering gypsies of the sea — the rising number of yachtsmen cruising the ocean in craft that range from 25-foot single-handed sloops to 100-foot floating apartments with air conditioning.

The island governments are particularly tough in searching for drugs, although they rarely find any.

In Fiji, the authorities insist that the yachtsmen — called "yachties" or "shippies" — go through port and immigration formalities before cruising to the outlying islands. This can take a yachtie 1,000 miles out of his way just to get his passport stamped.

In September and October Suva is like a yachties' convention centre with more than 100 yachts of a dozen nationalities readying to sail to Australia and New Zealand or reach the United States before the hurricane season starts in November.

No one knows how many yachts cruise the Pacific at any one time but estimates range between 500 and 1,000.

For many the fascination of cruising the Pacific has long since worn off. Gossip in anchorages across the Pacific tells of broken marriages, failed love affairs and ruptured friendships.

"Sailing is the most expensive way of travelling third class I know of," is a common gripe among yachties.

But for others, like Jeff Munger, a former stockbroker from Rumson, N.J., it is a way of life.

"Sure, there are some nights when it's blowing and you're up there hauling in sail," he said. "You say to yourself, why the hell aren't I like my brother living on a farm in Vermont? At least his bed doesn't move.

"But you make up for it in places like Bora Bora. Boy, that's paradise!"

Munger and four others, including a young Grenadian boy, have been sailing for three years on a round-the-world voyage aboard the 60-foot yawl Affair. They left Fort Lauderdale, Fla., in December, 1973, cruised the Caribbean, sailed through the Panama Canal, the Marquesas, Tahiti, Samoa, Tonga and Fiji.

From here, Affair is heading south to Australia before continuing through Southeast Asia, and the Suez Canal for the Mediterranean.

Yachties meet one another in distant ports, talk about storms, ports of call they liked and places to get supplies cheap.

They keep in touch at sea on a ham radio network, coordinated out of Port Vila in the New Hebrides by a New Zealander known only as Robbie. Robbie runs a ham service known as the Mickey Mouse Net, purely for the fun of it.

He plots positions of yachts, handles distress calls and arranges for spare parts to be flown to disabled boats.

But all is not plain sailing. Many yachts are lost on the lonely coral reefs of the Pacific, high-seas dramas that rarely get reported.

"Most are very good, but some are a bit of a nuisance," says the manager of Suva's waterfront Tradewinds Hotel, a rendezvous for hundreds of yachts each year. They pay $7.50 to moor and extra to use the pool, hot showers and laundry.

Ghost town awaits revival

PACIFIC, B.C. (CP) — This long-abandoned ghost town on the Skeena River will come alive May 20 wit hBritish Columbia's first annual ghost town revival.

Doug Aberley, 26, a former Californian, bought most of Pacific's 73 lots last year for $3,200. In three or four weeks the vanguard of what he hopes will form a new community will move in.

Aberley says he is shooting for a population of 75 to 100 for the town, about 90 miles east of Prince Rupert in west central B.C. Pacific's new lease on life will be celebrated with a music festival in the renovated town hall on the Victoria Day weekend.

Why Are We Such Grouchy Gardeners?

GARDENING
jack beastall

WORK FOR WEEK

Young rooted plants of zonal and other geraniums now in 2½ and 3-inch pots, can be potted up into 3½-inch pots, no larger, for indoor growing. Give sandy loam, no fertilizer, and damp soil but never have it wet. Give strong light but not heat.

Prick out indoor sown seedlings soon as can be handled; half inch high with two or four leaves according to kind.

Check coldframe for air to cuttings rooting there; glass top should have been raised during mild periods on most kinds of plants being stored. Check for slugs; put down a little salt between flats or pots if these are raised on bricks or stones. Shallow tin lids of stale beer attract slugs but must be checked each morning.

Plant rhubarb and asparagus if soil can be worked.

What has come over that particular segment of the population to which you and I belong, the home gardeners of the community?

Possibly it has escaped your notice, but we are creating the impression that gardeners are a group of grouchy, unreasonable people.

The time has come to take ourselves apart, examine the components of our make-up, then put back the useful parts and get rid of those which create a poor impression on other folds.

If we don't do it ourselves some outsider will do it for us, and we shall most likely resent what is revealed.

The image we present to our children, to our new neighbors from other lands and other parts of Canada, falls short of what is normally expected of the gardening fraternity.

Our climate is wonderful, our gardens should be excellent, yet we complain as if it were the biggest chore on earth to make them.

We insist on having lawns, then complain to outsiders of the time and labor needed for watering, fertilizing, edge trimming, cutting, weeding, killing moss, combating fairy-ring. The outsiders listen patiently and go on their way wondering.

Many parents are worried because their children have not "inherited" the same intense love for gardening. On the rare occasions I have been able to talk with these children they have posed questions difficult to answer.

One said: "Since I was knee high I've listened to Dad and Mom complain about the work involved, the difficulties of getting things to grow, the weeds, the pests, their aches and pains.

"I've had to stay home and do jobs just because the Jones' kid did them; I've had to eat cabbage seven days a week because Dad had labored to grow them and they were not to be wasted. We could never go on a picnic or a holiday because of the lawn to be cut, the potatoes to dig, or some vegetable to be canned. Surely there's a better way of living than having every moment and every meal geared to the garden."

In trying to impress young minds we have alienated any desire there may have been to follow our examples.

Newcomers from Europe find it most difficult to understand our approach to gardening.

"You talk of weeds and pests as if these plants and insects had no right to exist, as though they were put into your garden just to annoy you.

"You kill and destroy, yet you cannot name the good or the bad. You profess you love gardening, yet you complain at a little spading and consider it degrading to get on your knees and pull a few weeds. You would have no bird peck your fruit nor caterpillar chew a leaf, and when the leaves come down you become frantic. But all these are good; all these make a garden.

"Why do you not count your blessings, enjoy your wonderful freedom, and be thankful you are privileged to have a garden?"

How do we act when a new neighbor moves in? If he seems interested in gardening we expect him to listen to long stories of our problems, about the difficulty of growing plants in this climate. If he knows all that, we go out of our way to prove his approach to gardening is completely wrong.

Should the new neighbor not be remotely interested in gardening we complain over the condition of his lot, blame him for a our weeds and insects, object to his dog, cat, or children, instead of enlisting his co-operation and showing, by example, the benefits and pleasures of having a garden.

Sure we have problems, but they are problems resulting from the way of life we have chosen to follow. Let's face them. Let's show we can handle them. Let's be happy in our gardening and impress others with our happiness, not with our problems.

And let's keep in mind that our rights end where our neighbor's rights begin, and that is at the boundary lines of our property.

Each of us has a right to do as we wish with our garden. Each of us resents being told what we should do and ho we should do it. Let's concentrate on our own garden and leave the other fellow to tend his. It makes for much better neighbor relations.

It is about time we ceased hiding behind the phrase "but what would the neighbors think?"

While there is the odd instance where it indicates a desire for acceptance in the community, more often it is just an excuse for not doing something, or an admission we can't make up our mind.

As we start another round of planning and planting it may be worth our while to give a few thoughts to the image we present as gardeners to our children and their friends, to our neighbors, and to those with whom we converse on gardening.

We could very well resolve to go about our hobby of gardening with a cheery word and a smile; to overhaul our scale of values and endeavor to see things in their right perspective; to appreciate, and express our appreciation, of the privileges of having a garden in which to work, relax, and experience pleasures that costs nothing but mean a lot.

We could well afford to think twice before we groan and complain, for we shall often find that what we look upon as an imposed chore is actually a task we have made for ourselves in our desire to reach a certain goal. If it is more than we can accomplish, let's abolish that goal and not complain.

It would help a lot if we resolve never to lose our sense of humor; if we laughed at ourselves, our problems, and our pains. After all, others are laughing at us and we may as well join them.

Newest Ferries Safe, Says MoT

B.C. Ferries' Queen of Cowichan and Queen of Coquitlam are safe, Bob Baird of the Ministry of Transport said Friday.

He was replying to a statement by Elgin Neish, Victoria representative of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union, that the fleet's two newest vessels are unseaworthyy in rough weather.

Neish told Victoria Labor Council the ferries' stability was reduced because of their three tiers of cars. He said the ferries "are just as likely to roll over as a milk carton in rough seas."

Baird said the vessels have been thoroughly tested and inspected for stability under all conditions.

After passing local inspections, Baird said the ships' inspections had also had received approval from MoT officials in Ottawa and meet "internationally registered standards."

"These ferries are three compartment ships. Even if two compartments were open to the sea they'd still stay afloat."

Baird noted the Queen of Victoria 'had two compartments opened up when she collided with the Russian freighter Sergey Yesenin in Active Pass on Aug. 2, 1970, and there was never any danger of her sinking.

MAFIA VULNERABLE . . . IN THE WALLET

Who is the Mafia?

You are, says Ralph Salerno, American expert on organized crime.

In Victoria Friday on a speaking tour, Salerno said there is only one reason for organized crime's success: the public either through active participation or indifference allows it to prosper.

If you want to end organized crime, he said in an interview, you've got to hit it where it hurts most . . . in the pocketbook.

For the law-abider that means boycott. For the law enforcer it means stopping the flow of dirty money at the sources. For the lawmaker it means setting more realistic laws — legalizing gambling and heroin if necessary — but laws designed to take the profit out of organized criminal activity.

"It's impossible to compete with organized crime without the participation and support of the community," he said. "It can't be successfully done if police just work by themselves. There has to be social sanctions as well as criminal ones."

Salerno said organized crime is so widespread the extent of its proliferation isn't really known.

But there are indicators. Some are obvious, such as gambilng, loan-sharking, prostitution and drugs.

Some aren't so obvious.

—a person buys a business and pays an above-market price; he could be a front man for a crime syndicate wanting to establish itself in legitimate enterprise:

—a newcomer to an area makes lavish donations to charity and worthwhile civic causes; he could be setting himself up running for public office where he can act on organized crime's behalf.

—a developer suddenly comes up with hard, cold cash; he may be laundering illegally-gained money.

—a business sets its prices so low its competitors are driven into bankruptcy; it may be a sign of organized crime taking over an industry.

Salerno said anyone who displays unusual or strange business tactics, or who seems to have an endless source of ready cash, should be treated with suspicion, and investigated by the legitimate business community.

He said police often aren't the first to detect the presence of organized crime in a community. It is people in business.

He said the average Canadian has a mistaken idea of organized crime.

The popular notion is it is only the Mafia, he said. Most Canadian policemen are under the same misconception.

But the Mafia, he said, is only one group, albeit a large one, comprising 26 families scattered across the United States. None are in B.C.

Competing with them are syndicates whose members may just as easily be Orientals or of Scottish, Irish or French ancestry.

"Police are missing the boat if all they think they have to do to find organized crime is look at the Italian community."

Salerno doesn't believe organized crime can ever be totally destroyed.

"The best we can hope for it to reduce its impact," he said.

Radical TV Change Urged

TORONTO (CP) — Television programing would be radically restructured and existing facilities such as CBC, CTV and Global networks, independent stations and private cable companies would be eliminated under a proposal prepared for presentation to Ontario's royal commission on violence in the communications industry.

The proposal, prepared by Stuart Griffiths, a communications consultant, would set up 12 channels across the country and provide a total of 200 hours of daily programing controlled by a single agency called Television Canada.

Seven channels would broadcast in English and five in French, Griffiths said in his study released Friday.

Three of the English channels would carry entertainment shows, one news and public affairs, one serious entertainment, one children's shows until 7 p.m., then films until 1 a.m., and another would transmit regional, educational and consumer information shows.

Only restructuring can generate the funds and creativity needed to stimulate Canadian television programming, the study said.

"It is not enough to be concerned about the effects of television on Canadians, whether the focus is on violent programing or on lack of minority programing, distinctiveness, excellence or convenience," the study said. "What a system does not determine and originate, it cannot control.

"We can make few changes without changing the system if that system is to serve Canadian requirements effectively and do justice to the mosaic of cultural diversity that constitutes the Canadian reality."

B.C. Crime Inquiry Suggested

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

A crime commission similar to Quebec's should be formed in British Columbia, a leading U.S. expert on organized crime says.

Trying to fight organized crime by use of special police squads alone, such as the Coordinate Law Enforcement Unit (CLEU), isn't enough, he says.

"CLEU has had an interesting degree of success here but why not combine both — law enforcement and crime commission," says the 51-year-old lecturer and author of several books on the Mafia.

Salerno, a 20-year veteran of the New York police force, was in Victoria Thursday and Friday to meet CLEU officials and other groups in the justice system. He also met students at University of Victoria and Camosun College. He concluded his visit with a public lecture at Victoria High School Friday night on victimology, a discussion of the victims of organized crime.

In an interview Salerno said he considered crime commissions one of the best means to tackle organized crime.

It is one of the best, he said, because it dedicates itself to the critical area — gathering evidence, and does so in a way that normal police investigation cannot.

Society has placed certain limitations on police that have impeded the investigators' ability to gather evidence, he said and that makes it difficult to knife through the fabric cloaking organized crime.

He said it is all well and good for society to hold as sacrosanct such rights as the right of privacy but it must give those rights to all, even those engaged in organized crime.

"The public can't have it both ways."

He said police in B.C., Ontario and Quebec know the criminal kingpins. The trick, he said, is taking that knowledge and turning it into evidence that can be presented in courts.

Crime commissions provide a short-cut, exposing criminal activity to the public, before any charge is laid.

Although Section 8 of the B.C. Police Act gives the province the authority to set up a crime commission, such a move has never been seriously considered.

One reason is the question of provincial jurisdiction in conducting crime inquiries wasn't settled until last year when the Supreme Court of Canada ruled the provinces had the power.

Dr. Malcolm Matheson, head of CLEU's policy and analysis branch, said when CLEU, was being formed in 1974 the idea of a crime commission was talked about as a possible alternative. But it was quickly shelved after the decision was taken to follow the traditional route of police investigation and prosecution i ncourts.

The Second Findings Report of CLEU published last year indicated, however, that a study is under way to look into the feasibility of setting up a commission or inquiry into organized crime.

Deputy attorney-general David Vickers, chairman of the CLEU policy board, said the study hasn't been completed.

He said up to now a crime commission hasn't been considered either appropriate or necessary.

Attorney-General Garde Gardom's views are not known. Vickers said he has never discussed the matter with him.

In recent months there has been some talk of the federal government instituting a national crime inquiry.

He said commissions should be provincial and not federal for a number of reasons — the country is too big and there are too many basic differences among the regions.

He said he believes a commission would be useful in B.C. provided it didn't turn into a "organized witchhunt."

He said he recognizes such a probe would involve enormous costs but noted both the solicitor-general and justice minister are exploring ways to provide federal aid to help provinces establish commissions.

In a Times poll of eight of the 10 members of the CLEU policy board, which would make the recommendation to the attorney-general whether a crime commission should be formed, none said they would vote for establishing a commission at least at present.

But only one — Neil McDiarmid, director of Crown counsel said he was flatly opposed to the idea.

He said he has "fundamental philosophical disagreements," fearing a commission would lead to abuse, demolish civil rights, and, by lessening the requirement of the Crown to prove a case beyond a reasonable doubt, weaken the criminal legal process.

The majority, however, said they could see more advantages in having a commission than disadvantages.

Their objections were the costs involved and doubts that organized crime has reached the level in the province to warrant a commission.

Salerno strongly disagrees.

He pointed out it is only because of the Quebec inquiry that two of Montreal's leading underworld figures, Willie Obront and Vic Cotroni, are behind bars.

"The police have been trying to do that for the last 30 years," he said. "I'd hate to think of the hundreds of thousands even millions of dollars that have been spent in policy investigations over the years . . . all of them unsuccessful."

Salerno said the fact B.C, has more than half of all heroin addicts in Canada indicates there is a serious organized crime problem in the province "and calls for some very high priorities."

Veterinarian Study Like Physician's

elizabeth forbes

family

Contrary to what most people believe, the training for a veterinarian parallels much of the training for a student in human medicine.

That means six years of study from the time a young person decides to go in for animal care until he or she graduates from a veterinary college.

Dr. Suzanne Bircher went that route, all six years of it.

And she tells you that not only did she find training years the same as the medical profession but training itself was much the same, in many instances.

Indeed, she says, students taking human medicine and those in veterinary training at the university she attended, often sat in each others lectures.

"And in every instance they gained knowledge, no matter what side of the fence they were on."

She graduated in 1976 from a veterinary college in Saskatoon, attached to the University of Saskatchewan.

Shortly afterward she was married and with husband Bob, a young lawyer, set out for British Columbia to make their home.

"We settled in Victoria because we both love outdoor life and outdoor sports," she says. "We own a canoe and whenever it's possible we are off and away to explore some new lake or stream."

Immediately on arrival Suzanne took the provincial veterinary association examinations and passed with honors.

In clinic work you also find a parallel with human medicine, Suzanne says.

She sees a steady stream of out-patients, she checks for diseases, make diagnoses and does surgery and hospital work, much as she would if treating humans instead of animals.

The Quadra Animal Clinic does not have an operating room. So, when surgery is needed the doctors use facilities of the Central Victoria Veterinary Hospital.

In this part of the work, Dr. Bircher not only gives anesthetics she does all kinds of surgery.

"I've set bones, removed tumors, taken out a badly infected eye, worked on hip joints and done hysterectomies — which you may be surprised to know are one of the routine operations we perform."

Again, this young veterinarian points to the similarity between the set-up of human and animal operating rooms.

Animals go in for surgery on empty stomachs, just as humans do. The operating surgeon and assistants wear caps, masks, gowns and gloves. Surgical equipment is basically the same. Anesthetics are given in the same way as for humans.

What started this vivacious, articulate young woman on the road to becoming a veterinarian?

"A number of things," Dr. Bircher says.

First, 'although I was a city girl, I always loved to have animal pets. Next, as I advanced in school, science began to fascinate me and that interest was fostered by my parents and grandparents."

Science eventually led to an interest in medicine. then, about the time she started looking ahead to higher education, the University of Saskatchewan opened a veterinary school.

"In the beginning it wasn't popular with women," she says, "but somehow, I was interested. Perhaps it was the challenge .. . in any event, when I was ready for University of Saskatchewan, I decided to become a veterinarian."

Today, there are three veterinary colleges in Canada — at Guelph in Ontario, at Saskatoon and a French speaking one at St. Hyacinthe, not far from Montreal.

Not only that, Suzanne tells you that 25 per cent to one-third of all graduates are women now, and that her class of 1976 saw the largest number of women ever graduated in Canada.

Dr. Bircher loves her work. To her, there is just as much satisfaction in curing an animal by surgery or diagnostic care, as in curing a human patient.

"Perhaps more,' 'she says with quiet sincerity, "Animals cannot talk, so we rely on careful history taking from the owners, a keen sense of observation, training and expertise, and sometimes laboratory tests and X-rays, to understand the whole disease picture.

'Fitting 'the pieces together is often difficult but giving relief to an otherwise helpless animal is greatly rewarding."

RECIPE CORRECTION

One-half cup of chopped walnuts should have been included, and may be added to either the base or topping, depending on the effect desired.

Appointed To Council

OTTAWA (CP) — Monica Townson, former economics editor of the Financial Times of Canada, was recently appointed vice-chairman of the Advisory Council on the Status of women. The Montreal economist and journalist has worked in economic research in banking and investment firms in Britain and Canada and has been actively involved in the women's movement for many years.

Frugal Budget Key to Bliss

MONTREAL (CP) — A Montreal financial consultant has a word of advice for newlyweds who are itching to begin spending their money.

Don't make any important purchases until you have prepared a budget. In the opinion of Timothy Egan, president of T. E. Financial Consultants Ltd., a budget — a frugal one at that — is essential for a sound marriage.

"Money slips away so easily if you don't know where it's going or have no objective," Egan says. "To drift through life without a budget is financial suicide."

"If a couple wants to buy a house, or the wife wants to stop working to have children, there has to be a realistic assessment of what's coming in and what's going out."

In many of today's marriages both partners work and the sudden amalgamation of their incomes may go to their heads, Egan said,.

If the husband earns $12,000 and the wife earns $8,000 their combined salaries are not $20,000 in the only terms which make budget sense.

Their combined spendable income is about $16,000, the amount left after they've paid federal and provincial income taxes.

So, Egan says, they should think in terms of $16,000 spending money not $20,000. In addition, he feels that the wife's salary should be saved, and the two should live on the husband's after-tax income of about $9,400 a year.

He distributes this as follows: shelter $3,000; food $2,300; clothing $1,100; transportation $1,500; health $200; and recreation $700.

This leaves a contingency fund of $600 for emergencies and the inevitable unforseen extras.

The couple will probably need the wife's income to meet the heavy start-up expenses which usually are incurred immediately after the wedding. After about six months though, it should be directed to more fruitful, long-range uses.

Egan says the most important of those is the federal government's Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan. This allows each working person to invest up to $1,000 a year to a maximum of $10,000 toward the purchase of a house or furniture.

Money invested and used this way is tax free which Egan regards as "a top priority."

She's Listening To Middle-Aged

VANCOUVER (CP) — If you are middle-aged and want to talk about it, professor Barbara Egolf will want to listen to you.

In April, Ms. Egolf, 58, an assistant professor of education in the school of nursing at the University of British Columbia, will begin lining up interviews for a book now in progress, about men and women at middle life.

She invited an overwhelmingly middle-aged male audience at a service club luncheon this week to ask her questions about middle-age and to tell her what it was like to be a middle-aged man.

The audience made no comments and asked no questions, but Ms. Egolf was assured the club members were very concerned about her belief that male hormones change their peaks as the man gets older.

Some men after the age of 60 (and a few sooner) "notice that their greatest sex urge occurs around 5 or 6 a.m.," she said, in a background paper on hormones given out before her talk.

She said middle-aged men are often the victims of stereotypes, particularly those presented in advertising.

They are expected to defer to others in some ways.

The middle-aged man is expected to put his children through college and "be willing to move over when someone comes up through the ranks" of his company, Ms. Egolf said.

All this can lead to a loss of identity, she said.

Many diseases thought of as being those of middle-age where actually started in youth, she said, and men are set up for heart attacks in middle life by the stress they find in their jobs.

Women might soon be suffering more early heart attacks as more and more of them have careers outside the home, she said, because in addition to facing the pressures of competition "perhaps there is a chip on the shoulder of a lot of women."

For most men the loss of identity suffered in middle-age is a more serious problem than any physiological change.

"Men with a religion, philosophy, or set of values seem to be better able to carry on," she said.

CAMERA DETECTS CARIES

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — A united States dental researcher has developed an ultra-violet camera that can detect tooth decay two years before it becomes visible.

The camera was developed by Dr. Israel Kleinberg, formerly of University of Manitoba and now chairman of the oral biology and pathology department at the State University of Stoneybrook, N.Y., said Dr. John Gwinnett, an associate professor in the department. Gwinnett, formerly a dental researcher at University of Western Ontario, said the ultra-violet camera can spot tooth decay at such an early stage that measures to reverse the decay can be taken.

He was in London to discuss the camera at a conference of the International Assocation for Dental Research.

Work on the camera is still experimental Gwinnett said, but it has already been shown that it can detect dental plaque — the forerunner of tooth decay — which is left behind even after careful cleaning by a dental hygienist.

He said the plaque is deposited in predictable patterns, "almost like a fingerprint" for an individual.

The ultr-violet camera would not replace x-ray protography, which must still be used to examine areas the camera cannot see but it could find areas of early decay and locate potential disease-producing organisms.

Early decay areas can be treated with concentrated tooth-paste or fluoride while the ultra-violet technique can also be used to show patients whether the way they clean their teeth is successfu, Gwinnetts aid.

Altering a Pattern no Problem

KNIT and CHAT

By MAY E. MACLEAN

I have had quite a few letters just recently, asking me if I can design certain things especially for them. Unfortunately, time does not permit me, as original designs can be quite time consuming. Also the alteration of patterns, either larger or smaller. With a little time and patience, you can do this yourself, taking into account the tension, that is the number of stitches to the inch in width.

Naturally you cannot get rid of all of these extra stitches when you cast off for the armholes, some will have to be absorbed here, a few more at the neck, and the remainder taken off with the shoulder stitches.

Another ladys writes that she has just purchased the Ladies Home Journal Needle and Crafts books and there is a sweater that she would very much like to make, but of course the American yarns and wools are not available on the Canadian market. It just so happens that I know that Reynold's Classique is like a heavy four ply fingering. This is the risk you take when substituting another yarn, will it take more or less than the original amount stated? Nobody can tell until you have finished the garment. If you are short, you then run the risk of getting another dye lot, and a possible slight change in the color. I always firmly recommend that you use the wool or yarn called for in the pattern, then you will be completely satisfied.

If you do have a query, I would like you to enclose a stamped addressed envelope for your reply, and I will do my best to answer you.

If you want to put wording either in knitting or needlepoint, graph paper will help you work this out. It can be obtained from any stationery store and only costs a few cents. Take into account your tension, both width and depth. Remember the number of stitches to the inch either way, then you can calculate how big your letters or design will appear when finished.

It's always fun to make something for the home, and if you have a lampshade which needs perking up, or if you are like me a collector of antiques, you'll just love crocheting this trimming! Nostalgia is all the "in" thing right now, so that this particular trimming reminds one of Victoriana, the rage right now!

Simple and quick ~~to~~ crochet, it can be adapted to any size of lampshade. The next time you're near a small appliances repair shop, ask ther price of a dozen disposable bags for your vacuum cleaner. They're usually cheaper by the dozen even at department store repair departments, even less than the price per bag when you buy a few at discount stores.

Learning to groom your dog saves money even when you invest in grooming shears. Some of these shears have detachable blades that you throw away when dull. Others must be sent back to the factory for sharpening.

But — not if you know a good scissors sharpener. Detachable blades can be sharpened locally for much less than replacing the blade or shipping charges.

Every year Canadians contribute millions of dollars to charitable appeals. By far the majority of these fund-raising drives are genuine. However, caution is in order.

The leaflet "Consumer Tips On Charitable Donations" encourages you to support charitable organizations but also points out some hazards.

It says, for instance, that certain so-called 'charitable appeals' are simply profit-making schemes. Therefore, the leaflet advises Canadians not to contribute to any unknown charity which solicits door-to-door or by phone, unless you have investigated the appeal. Don't give before you know who sponsors the appeal and who will benefit from your contribution.

If a solicitor rings your bell, don't give cash unless he clearly identifies himself, If you want to make your donation by cheque, make it payable to the sponsoring charity and not to the person who solicits your contribution. Also, request an authorized receipt.

If you are in doubt about a charitable appeal being above board, consult the Better Business Bureau nearest you.

For the leaflet contact your closest Better Business Bureau or the Better Business Bureau of Canada, 76 St. Clair Avenue West, Toronto, Ontario M4V 1N2.

With your request please enclose a long (No. 10) self-addressed, stamped envelope and allow at least 2-3 weeks for delivery.

UNSATISFIED? HERE'S WHY

When furnishings are scrubbed "steamed" or shampooed or when "do-it-yourself" sudsed powdered or sprayed much or all of the clinging, greasy grime goes deeper, to breed germs and to seep back to resoil the surface.

When Duracleaned, soil comes OUT

Laboratory tests showed scrubbing took out only 46% as much soil as Duraclean. Do-it-yourself ways removed less or NONE.

Leading carpet and furniture makers recommend Duraclean Craftsmen to take the soil OUT and to prolong the life of the fabrics and carpetings they make.

7 ON-LOCATION SERVICES include: soil retarding, mothproofing, replacing carpet tufts, fire resistance, control of carpet static, stain removal. Worldwide.

Substitute for Hair Required

By DR. FRANK MILLER

Blaze
2-13 Busk

DEAR DR. MILLER: Blaze, our nine-year-old male sheltie is losing his hair, and has been for some time. He's worn a flea collar for eight years. His doctor said the collar was not the cause of the hair loss. He has no sores, or fleas, ticks, lice, or anything like that. He was tested for small skin mites. He was x-rayed, nothing suspicious found. Blood tests ruled out weak thyroid. Other tests have ruled out a bunch of other stuff. Still he loses hair. I'm afraid he will be completely bald soon. Help.

—K.A.

DEAR K.A.: Your own doctor seems hardly to have left a hair unturned, though consultation with a veterinary dermatological specialist might raise another possibility or two. Kidney and liver malfunction, long-term allergy, other hormonal considerations, a chronic poisoning. These and other considerations may already have been reviewed. In the meantime, Blaze had better be equipped with a substitute wardrobe. Something soft, warm, nonallergenic and comfortable.

DEAR DR. MILLER: How long can we wait before giving our new dog distemper shots? We don't want him running around biting people, but we don't want to buy the shots now either.

—R.R.

DEAR R.R.: Distemper shots don't modify your dog's disposition and don't have anything to do with his temper, or lack of one. Adequate exercise, proper confinement and obedience training, plus simple good home care, will go a long way toward keeping your dog's disposition desirable. Even so, he should receive distemper shots now. Distemper is a very common and very deadly viral disease which can kill him unless he is protected by the vaccine.

It's important to vaccinate him at once because he can pick up this virus at any time and will have no immunity unless he's been vaccinated.

DEAR DR. MILLER: My husband said, So Queenie's coughing and sneezing a little. Big deal. She's got a cold. Give her a little time, she'll get over it." So he has. Six months. She's not over it. I think he's being too patient and that we should have her looked at. He says, Big deal. She's sneezing a little. So what?" So I'm asking you, so I can tell him, so what?

(Queenies' a cat.)—A.S.

DEAR A.S.: Just how big a deal it's become only her own veterinarian can say for sure — and should be given the opportunity. Many untended-to upper respiratory infections result in a chronic sinus infection which can be uncomfortable and predispose the cat to other respiratory problems.

Some of these initially untreated conditions leave other parts of the respiratory tract, including the lungs themselves, permanently weakened. Finally, some of these sneezing cats who seem to have just a cold in the first place don't become chronic respiratory cripples only because they succumb to pneumonia or other complications before the disease can reach a chronic stage. While it's true every sneeze isn't a signal for a quick trip to the hospital, it's also a mistake to let even a seemingly mild infection drag on into the chronic stage. So what if a checkup is long overdue? Ignoring the problem may well be causing the cat some discomfort and is undobtedly increasing its chances for more serious disease in the future.

indoor gardens

By LYNN and JOEL RAPP

DEAR LYNN and JOEL: I, along with a group of my fellow employees, received a beautiful poinsettia plant from the company for which we work. Would you please print some information on care of the plant through the year to have a beautiful blooming poinsettia for Christmas next year? Sincerely.—G.B.

DEAR G. B.: The best thing to do is put the plant in your sunniest window. Perhaps the colorful bracts (flowers) will continue to bloom for quite some time. If so, just water often enough to keep the plant damp and then feed a good flower food once a month come spring.

If the flowers fall off, then you will probably have to cut the plant way back, leaving it in the sunny window and watering until about two months before Christmas. By that time, it should have regrown into a nice, leafy, green plant. Now — and this is tricky — put the plant in a dark place, really dark, like a closet, for about a month, watering only about once during that month.

Then, about a month before Christmas, bring the plant out and start moving it slowly toward the light and feeding every two weeks. If you're lucky you should have a blooming plant by Christmastime.

And, by the way — and this is important — pick one person in the office to take care of the plant. Many plants in offices die because of too many cooks, so to speak.

Psst! Gossip's Useful

EAST LANSING, Mich. (UPI) — Nearly everyone does it. There's no reason to feel guilty. In fact, it can be of benefit to society.

Gossip, that is.

A University of Pennsylvania psychologist who lectured recently at Michigan State University cast a new light on the art of gossip.

"Gossip," John Sabini said, "serves a useful purpose. Gossip is a form of moral education, a kind of morality play which helps to set standards of conduct."

Gossip, Sabini said, must be a gift of new information relative to some specific misbehavior and it must suggest a norm for proper conduct.

Machine Helps Paraplegics

By LESTER L. COLEMAN, M.D.

People with paralysis of the legs have been fitted with an electrical machine which fits around the leg and the lower part of the body. A reinforced fiberglass corset fits below the rib cage and is attached to braces on the hips and legs.

This machine, driven by an electric motor, can support a person weighing fore than 250 pounds.

Dr. Ali Seireg, at the University of Wisconsin in Madison, has created this computerized device by which paraplegics can walk, sit, stand, climb stairs and step over obstacles.

A group of mechanical engineers at the university are trying these machines in an effort to allow paraplegics to function independently.

A clever electronic device can be connected to a telephone to give the elderly or the handicapped special security in cases of emergency.

Dr. S. Dibner, at Boston University, has devised a system known as "Lifeline," by which communication with a central security station is constantly available. Attached to this device are simple emergency buttons by which people can call for help.

The device has a timer. When the telephone is used for ordinary purposes, the timing device is reset for a 24 hour period. If the telephone has not been used in 24 hours, a telephone operator calls and, if no one answers, enlists the help of the police.

More information about this can be obtained from Lifeline Systems in Boston, Mass.

Spasms of the blood vessels to the brain are known to be caused by the release of a chemical called serotonin. Serotonin is produced in the blood when one of its ingredients, the platelets, is damaged.

Dr. George S. Allen, of Johns Hopkins Hospital, has been using a new drug which he feels can combat the spasms caused by serotonin. Although this is a highly technical study, I bring it to your attention as another example of the important behind-the-scenes activity in laboratories all over the world.

CANADIANS OVERWEIGHT

BRANTFORD, Ont. (CP) — The Nutrition Canada survey has shown that more than 50 per cent of Canadians are overweight. Denise Kendall, home economist with the provincial ministry of agriculture said the survey showed three trends which are: males are better off nutritionally than females; seniors have greater problems and Indians and Eskimos in the north are worse off than the general public because fresh fruit and vegetables are at a premium.

10 Commandments For Husbands

DEAR READERS: Last week I published my Ten Commandments for Wives. And now . . .

TEN COMMANDMENTS

1. Thou shalt put thy wife before thy mother, thy father, thy daughter, and thy son, for she is thy lifelong companion.

2. Abuse not thy body either with excessive food, tobacco or drink, that thy days may be many and healthful in the presence of thy loved ones.

3. Permit neither thy business, nor thy hobby, to make of thee a stranger to thy children, for the precious gift a man giveth his family is his time.

4. Forget not the virtue of cleanliness.

5. Make not thy wife a beggar, but share willingly with her thy worldly goods.

6. Forget not to say, "I love you." For even though thy love be constant, thy wife doth yearn to hear the words.

7. Remember that the approval of thy wife is worth more than the admiring glances of a hundred strangers. Cleave unto her and forsake all others.

8. Keep thy home in good repair, for out of it cometh the joy of thy old age.

9. Forgive with grace, for who among us does not need to be forgiven?

10. Honor the Lord thy God all the days of thy life, and thy children will rise up and call thee blessed.

Poetry Reading at Art Gallery

St. Patrick's Day, Thursday, will be marked by a unique departure from this season's schedule at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria. In place of the music series, Theme and Variations, two noted Victoria theatrical personalities, Sylvia Hatchman and Anthony Jenkins, will be presented in Yes and No: An Evening of Contemporary Religious Poetry.

Drawing on the works of 18 poets from 12 countries, the evening's readings will be concerned with a range of ideas and attitudes extending from Nigeria's neo-traditional catholicism through Afro-American pragmatism to Japanese nihilism.

Two major works will be Gael Turnbull's Lindisfarne and John Montague's From a New Siege, counterpointing both skepticism and despair in ironic opposition to the usual St. Patrick's Day rejoicing.

Ms. Hatchman is a newcomer to Victoria. She was a founder member of Theatre Calgary and is now a member of the Victoria Theatre Guild, where she was seen this season in the role of Gwendolyn Fairfax in The Importance of Being Earnest.

Jenkins is a prominent local actor, an associate professor and director of the English Honors Program at UVic. At present he is in rehearsal for a Jacobean play by John Tourneur, The Revenger's Tragedy. He is heard regularly on CBC Radio in plays and documentaries.

Thursday's performance begins at 8 p.m.

Early Artists Exhibited

A variety of media ranging from charcoal sketches and drawings to plaster sculpture is included in a new exhibition being circulated by the extension department of the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria. The artists are notable Canadian artists such as F. H. Varley, W. J. Phillips, E. J. Hughes and Emily Carr.

The exhibition's title is Early 20th Century Canadian Artists in B.C., and it has been designed for travel to mainland and Island communities. The Gallery's extension officer, Nicholas Tuele, will accompany the showing to a number of schools and communities and it will serve as an integral part of the forthcoming Heritage Festival in Port Alberni.

Made available in part through funding from the National Museums Corporation, the exhibition will be on tour during March and April.

Enquiries from those interested in receiving the exhibition should be made to the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria, 1040 Moss, or call 384-4101.

Choral Concert

A variety concert will be presented by Victoria Choral Society Tuesday at 8 p.m. at St. Joseph's Church, 745 West Burnside. Sharing the program will be the University of Victoria String Ensemble. Adult admission is $2, students and senior citizens, $1.

'Fit-Up' Training for the Theatre

audrey johnson

Meeting Adrian Jarvis for the first time is quite an experience. If theatre is your bag you've probably encountered him on stage a time or two over the last couple of seasons; on several occasions at Langham Court, for example.

He and wife Monica last fall played the sadistic Leo Hubbard and tormented wife Birdie in The Little Foxes. And the season before he had a major role in The Entertainer.

The Jarvises have been here two years approximately, and as far as theatre is concerned it's a case of total family involvement. Minoca, for instance, not only is an effective actress but a practised stage designer as her present very competent set for Theatre Guild's Look Homeward Angel will testify.

Son Martin and daughter Helen have also been seen on stage quite frequently at both Langham Court and the Phoenix Theatre.

But it is Adrian's latest and distinctly unusual assignment that prompted a meeting a lively conversation full of surprises and intriguing information.

A teacher at Belmont Senior Secondary School, he is spending his free evenings with the Victoria Actors Association and loving every minute of it. He's happy because what he is doing has a direct link with his prifessional theatre background, it's a lot of fun, and he's enjoying working under the direction of Allan Purdy, who, says Adrian, "knows exactly what he's doing and how to get their best from his actors."

So what is he doing?

"Well we can't mention the name of the play," he tells you; "I can only say that it's probably the funniest play I've ever been in."

Can't mention the name? How come?

"Due to the North American agent's conditions. You see the play is brand new — never been performed in North America by anybody — I believe it's still running in London. We got very special dispensation."

Again — how come?

"Through the author, Ray Conney; at least he's one of two who collaborated on this wild farce. Remember, Cooney and John Chapman were co-authors of the first play put on by the Actors' Association — Move Over Mrs. Markham?"

Yes indeed. That was almost exactly two years ago and an outstanding success.

"But this one's even better," says Jarvis. "Wall-to-wall laughts and a beautifully constructed play by an absolute master of the genre. Great sight-gags and delayed punch lines."

How does author Cooney get into the action on the Victoria front?

"Because he and I are old associates," says Jarvis. "Cooney began his theatrical career as a boy actor in Life With Father. Today he's a brilliant success in London as an actor-manager, playwright-director.

"But in between — 24 years ago in fact — we were both actors in Midland Productions, a fit-up company touring Wales 12 months of the year."

What's a fit-up company?

"It's an acting troupe which tours towns and villages where there is no resident repertory theatre, mounts a different play each night of the week and stays probably for three weeks before moving on to the next community. Ours was one of several operating in different parts of the U.S.

"We travelled in a cattle truck carrying four tons of equipment including a generator and Tilly lamps in case we struck a village without electricity. If there was no stage we built one on arrival and set up while the women in the company went out to scout for lodgings.

"We carried two sets of furniture, one good set and one second best. We sat on the second-best in the truck when we were en route."

The actors had their own personal wardrobes and shared with each other. "I had a new tail suit," Jarvis remembers with a grin, "but I hardly ever got to wear it — Ray (Cooney) or somebody else would have the part that required it."

Adjuncts such as swords, boots, special headdresses were owned by the company, which also owned one copy of any play which was going to be done.

As Adrian Jarvis talked at first it wounded as though a fit-up company would be restricted to endless go-rounds of a very limited repertory.

But no, he says. "We did a wide range of plays all the way from melodramas like East Lynne and Trilby, to Wuthering Heights and then current London successes such as Rebecca, Night Must Fall and Five Finger Exercise."

How was it possible to do so many plays to say nothing of freshening the repertoire now and then? It worked this way, Jarvis explains:

"The old man (the actor-manager, who was about 70) having read a play he thought suitable to add to the repertory, would announce it and say who was going to play which part in the production to go on the following night.

"So at around 11 p.m. after performance, we'd go to our lodging and in an exercise book (we bought them ourselves out of our tiny pay of four pounds—10 a week) we'd copy our sides (speeches) and cues. By the time we'd finished copying — around 4 a.m. — we'd have pretty well learned our part. Later in the morning, after a few hours sleep, we'd finish learning the roles and in the afternoon there'd be a "blocking" rehearsal. And that night we played it — without a prompter."

Improvisational theatre, it seems, is not all that new. Blocking rehearsals consisted of the director indicating to the actors in which areas they were to play given scenes and the actors sharing the scene arranged their sitting or standing, movement and business, between themselves.

Jarvis agrees that interpretation was up to the actors and lacked depth. But a harmony of thought develops between actors who work so closely together and frequent reading of scripts heightens one's ability to penetrate; circumstances that compensate to some extent for such abbreviated production technique. A little of such wit and memory-sharpening experience would do no harm to most young actors.

"As for audience participation, it was 100 per cent," he says. "The people would come from miles around. They would sit their with tears running down their cheeks when we played East Lynne, roar at the comedies, shout out comments.

"It's all gone now. The fit-up productions received the kiss of death when television came to the towns and villages."

But one old lady expressed the feelings of many when she told Jarvis: "We liked it better when you English actors came to the village. It was more exciting."

Adrian served in the Royal Navy during the war, then went to university, became a teacher and left that for his 30 shilling-a-week (student pay) theatre job, subsequently meeting the actress-artist who became his wife and forming the lasting friendship with Cooney.

The Jarvis family came to Canada in 1970 and to Victoria four years later.

Following a transatlantic telephone call from Adrian to Cooney, the special-favor permission was given the Actors Association for production of the play but terms of the agent's release don't explain how the company is supposed to attract an audience, seeing it is not permitted to advertise.

However, the farce-comedy is going on at McPherson Playhouse March 23-26 and word is that opening night only will be sold at a flat $2.50 for any seat in the house on the usual reservation basis.

After all, what's in a name when you've had a taste of the quality before?

'Parasitism' Charge Laid

MOSCOW (Reuter) — A Jewish activist has been arrested and charged with "parasitism," sources said Thursday. Paratism, which carries a maximum two-year sentence, has been used against dissidents and Jewish activists who have lost their jobs. Exiled historian-playwright Andrei Amalrik was charged under the clause, designed to keep loafers and vagrants out of the larger cities.

Top Violinist With Symphony

By AUDREY JOHNSON

A remarkable musical emigrant from the Soviet Union has stepped in to fill Canadian engagements vacated by famed violinist Igor Oistrakh. He is Albert Markov, a mature artist (in his early forties) of exceptional gifts and rich artistic background.

Markov was a member of the prestigious Moscow State Philharmonic Soloists, a sort of inner circle of acclaimed Soviet artists. As well as being a noted teacher and published composer, he has raised critical eyebrows in the United States since moving to North America with wife and two sons in late 1975.

He will be performing in Victoria on Sunday and Monday in the 10th pair of Victoria Symphony concerts, playing the Beethoven Violin Concerto with Laszlo Gati conducting.

"My problem was the absence of possibility to organize my artistic life on my own. I had no choice about where to perform . . . The Ministry (of Culture) had to approve my repertory. Ten years ago I wasn't allowed to play the Stravinsky Violin Concerto or the one by Berg."

His teaching program and method were subject to government approval, he says, and so were all his compositions that he submitted for publication.

Markov's debut recital in Alice Tully Hall in New York last November had reviewers rhapsodizing. "Truly a soulful violinist" . . . "Committed to the style of the bravura romanticist" . . . "a complete wizard" . . . "an interpreter of sensitivity and subtlety" proclaimed the New York press.

Markov now teaches at New York's Mannes School of Music and holds master classes at Yale. His wife, Marina, is also a fine violinist and their sons, 16-year-old Pavel, a pianist, and 13-year-old Alexander, a violinist, appeared with him in an encore number at the Tully Hall debut.

He has appeared previously in Canada with the Toronto Symphony and will fulfill several engagements in Western Canada on this tour.

Also on the weekend pair of concerts is Debussy's L'apres midi d'un Faun and Beethoven's Symphony No. 8.

It is rare for the Symphony to perform two concert pairs within the same week but this is about to happen when the orchestra and Maestro Gati return to the Royal on Wednesday and Thursday with French pianist Philippe Entremont.

The immense success of Entremont's former visit a year ago brought requests for his early return and the forthcoming dates were the only ones left open.

Internationally acknowledged as one of the great concert artists of our day, Entremont will perform not just one concerto, but a whole program with the orchestra, beginning with the Mozart Concerto No. 12 in A Major.

There will follow the impressions for orchestra and piano by Manuel de Falla, Nights in the Gardens of Spain, and Tchaikovsky's Concerto No. 1, Op. 23 in B-flat Major. It's an incomparable opportunity to hear "live" a pianist whose records have sold over the million mark and have for five consecutive years been awarded the Grand Prix du Disque.

But concerts commence at 8 p.m. instead of the usual 8:30. Tickets are available at the McPherson Playhouse box office and Hillside Shopping Mall ticket centre.

Actors' Union Breaks Away

Anothes step in Canada's move away from foreign domination has been made with the amicable separation of Canadian Actors' Equity Association from the United States Association, which took place April 1, 1976. Prior to that time it was known merely as the Canadian branch of Actors' Equity.

Smallest Matter Particles Proven

HAMBURG, West Germany (UPI) — German scientists have proven the existence of atomic particles probably smaller than electrons that previously were known only in theory, Prof. Herweig Schopper said today.

The discovery may lead to revisions of existing theories on matter and its smallest particle, hitherto thought to be the electron, Schopper said.

He made the announcement as he showed Chancellor Helmut Schmidt around the "Desy" electron accelerator, used in the experiments that proved the existence of "heavy leptons."

A research team known as "Pluto" and headed by Prof. Hinrich Meyer of Wuppertal, proved the existence of the particles first identified in theory by American physicists in 1975, Schopper said.

He said like electrons, "heavy leptons" are electrically charged. But they weigh 4,000 times more than electrons and have an extremely short life of 1,000-billionth of a second.

Schopper also said that with the German discovery, scientists may learn that there are at least six leptons surrounding the atomic core, and perhaps an unlimited number of "heavy leptons" around the core.

Previously, scientists had assumed that only four leptons surrounded the atomic core.

No More Nuclear Carriers?

WASHINGTON (UPI) The big nuclear aircraft carriers may have had it.

The U.S. Senate appropriations committee has followed the lead of the House and voted to halt construction of a fourth nuclear-powered Nimitz-class carrier.

The 18-3 vote was consistent with President Carter's wishes that $81.6 million budgeted for work on the huge carrier during the current fiscal year be held up.

The House earlier approved Carter's proposal to abandon construction of the huge new carrier. The Senate committee voted 16 to 6 to ask the Pentagon to speed up design and development of smaller carriers that would be able to handle vertical takeoff aircraft.

Clam Shells 'Float' Highway on Marsh

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — With the help of two Turkish-born engineers, Louisiana has developed a method of building "floating" highways over marsh as soft as ice cream.

The main ingredient is a lot of clam shells. And Louisiana has a lot of clam shells.

"In 1971 we were just getting involved with relocation of U.S. 90 and needed to come up with a cheap method to cross a marsh," said Ali Kemahli, soil design engineer for the state highway department.

His division linked up with a Louisiana State University engineering team to research the idea of using clam shells for a highway embankment.

The university team was headed by Ara Arman, a civil engineering instructor who, like Kemahli, moved to the U.S. from Istanbul years ago.

They attended the same university in Istanbul, though at different times. And both attended University of Texas, again at different times.

"It really wasn't a new idea," said Kemahli. "Oil companies had been building small work roads with clam shells for years. But no one had tried to build a major highway on such an embankment. Now we've got Alabama doing it."

The final decision to try the new method was made when the department was faced with building a 4.4-mile section of U.S. 90 near Raceland in the heart of the state's marsh country. The road will be completed in two years.

The questionable stretch near Raceland is so soft a demonstration film shows a man easily pushing a 12-foot pole into the marsh with one arm.

To use the traditional embankment of sand, the department would have had to dredge up tons of marsh mud and use an enormous amount of sand fill. After all that, there would be no guarantee the sand wouldn't just disappear into the marsh.

Even if enough sand could be poured, the cost of construction of the tiny stretch of road would be about $26 million. And an elevated highway would have cost about $30 million.

No dredging is required for a shell embankment. It's just a matter of dumping the shells into the marsh. The total cost of the 4.4 miles will be roughly $10 million.

Construction crews are building a five-foot-high shell embankment, allowing for about two feet of settling.

"The shell is lighter than soil or sand and virtually floats like a raft on the muck after just a little settling," one of Kemahli's engineers noted.

The team built a demonstration road first and then double-checked in the lab.

A ton of sand is cheaper than a ton of shell but it doesn't take as much shell to build an embankment. And since there is no sand near the marsh, transportation costs also become a factor in the final cost.

"What the shell does is give us an alternative to sand and make the contracts more competitive," Kemahli said.

The present U.S. 90 coast road was built along natural ridges in the marsh and therefore is full of curves and dangerous, engineers said.

Rebate Rate High

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — About 90 per cent of all Newfoundlanders who file income tax returns receive rebates, says an official in the St. John's office of the national revenue department.

Cecil Strickland, public relations officer, said 206,000 residents of the province filed returns in 1976 and 186,000 received rebates averaging $241.

The total amount of refunds was $45 million.

Strickland said the majority of those filing were honest about their earnings and while some returns were questioned, no one was jailed last year for income tax violations.

The St. John's office has 175 full-time personnel and extra employees are hired seasonally when people are preparing their returns.

The staff annually handles 60,000 telephone calls, 10,000 office inquiries and a considerable volume of correspondence.

308-A CARDS OF THANKS

At some time the thought that we would suffer the loss of our loved one occurred to us but we little realized the extent of all the sympathetic understanding that would exist. We are more grateful than mere words can express to all who did so much to help us through this sad time. Sincere thanks to our many friends, neighbors, relatives, Eaton's and coworkers, staff Cambridge Super Market and customers for all their beautiful floral tributes, expressions of sympathy and donations to Heart Fund. Special thanks to the Pallbearers, Canon W. E. Greenhalgh, Padre Timmons, Mrs. M. Wilmshurst, organist and Sands Funeral Chapel — Mrs. Edith Gilmore, Rick, Sandy, Tim, Mrs. Letty-Hamilton and families.

We wish to express our sincere thanks to the many friends, neighbors and members of the Victoria Bowmen Archery Club, Western Professional Archers, Nanaimo Archery Club, Victoria Riding Academy, Northwest International Horseshow Association, Western Horsemen's Club, Cowichan District Riding Club, North and south Saanich Agricultural society who gave their kindness, sympathy, beautiful floral arrangements and donations to the Cancer Society during the illness and death of a beloved husband, father, grandfather and brother. Adell Bishop, Michael Roy Bishop and family, Wilson and Yvonne Bishop.

Mrs. Ada Barner wishes to express her most sincere thanks to her many friends for all the cards, the flowers, and the good wishes which they sent to her during her recent illness.

Especially she would like to thank Doctors Richardson and Warren, and Rev. John Watson, and all the nurses and orderlies on first south, the Jubilee Hospital, for their great kindness, and for their loving ministry to her. Words cannot express the fullness and the depth of her appreciation.

KLATT — Leonhard A., died March 12th, 1976.
Gone dear father, gone forever,
How we miss your smiling face,
But you left us to remember

A happy home we once enjoyed,
How sweet the memory still,
But death was left a loneliness,
The world can never fill.
—Our love, your children, grandchildren, great grandchildren and great, great-grandchildren.

SMITH — In loving memory of a dear husband, father, and grandfather, Thomas, who passed away March 12, 1966.

Recalls the love, the voice, the smile
Of the one who once sat there.
—Sadly missed by Jessie and family.

SOMMERVILLE—In loving memmbory of our dear daughter, and granddaughter, Darlene who passed away March 13, 1967.
—Always remembered and sadly missed by Mom, Dad, and Grannie.

In loving memory of Agnes Wilkinson, passed away March 6, 1977.
It broke our hearts to lose you
You did not go alone,
For part of us went with you
The day God called you home
There is no parting from those we love,
No distance can divide,
For each day in memory's garden
We still walk side by side.
There is someone who misses you sadly,
And finds the time long since you went,
There is someone who thinks of you always,
And tries to be brave and content.
Gone is the face we loved so dear,
Silent the voice we loved to hear;
'Tis sad, but true, I wonder why,
The best are always the first to die.
—Sadly missed and Ever Remembered by Ruby, Janice, John-Wayne Costin.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD, AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEAR'S CONDEMN, AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
WITH GRATITUDE, SANDS

HOW TO WRITE

A GOOD

CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room etc., for rent, or property for sale, start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably when given complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer: the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. for your [illegible] Monday through Saturday [illegible]. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

Price Split Remains

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — There is little possibility that Saudi Arabia and Iran will reach a compromise on the price of oil marketed by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries before July, U.S. state and treasury department officials said this week.

"Government and oil industry analysts have been maintaining a close watch on international price and supply developments since the OPEC set new prices last December.

At that time Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates, which account for one-third of OPEC's total production, refused to increase prices more than five per cent while Iran and 10 other producers set a two-phase 15 per cent increase.

"There is no evidence that either the high or low-tier producers wish to reach an accommodation on prices — the possibility that a two-tier system could remain in effect beyond July exists," a state department official said.

A senior Saudi official, Dr. Farouk Akhdar, said in an interview with The Washington Post that Saudi Arabi would not seek a compromise with Iran. "It is difficult to divorce price from political factors," Akhdar said.

Akhdar, who is Secretary General of the Royal Commission for the Country's western provinces of Jubail and Yanbu, stressed that the Saudi's have pursued a course of moderating OPEC prices. "Saudi Arabia," Akhdar said, "would never let the world economy suffer because of her decisions."

Government and industry sources said Saudi Arabia's Crown Prince Fahd, who will meet with President Carter in Washington next month, forged the Saudi's moderate pricing policy.

At a meeting with oil company officials in Tehran last month, the Shah of Iran said he expected the companies to continue to buy Iranian oil, in spite of the price differential with Saudi oil.

Following the December OPEC meeting, the Saudi's told the Arabian American Oil Co. to increase production to 9.6 million barrels a day, but because of severe weather conditions in January, Aramco was able to produce and ship only 8.4 million barrels a day.

The weather at Ras Tanura, Saudi Arabia's major oil port, and a rising demand for oil in the consuming countries enabled Iran to ship 5.1 million barrels of oil a day in January. In February Iran's production rose to 5.6 million barrels a day.

U.S. government analysts said that if Iran's production falls much below 4.9 million barrels a day the Shah may ask the State Department, as he did last year, to put pressure on the oil companies to increase production.

"The companies are not feeling the strain now, but they could later this spring, depending upon demand," one industry source said.

The next OPEC ministerial meeting is scheduled to take plaee next July in Stockholm.

MINE DELAYED

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Winslow Bennett, president of Equity Mining, says development of a silver mine 24 miles south of Houston has been put off for one year.

The 4,800 ton-per-day open pit mine was supposed to start up in the spring and hire about 175 workers.

Bennett said in a telephone interview from Vancouver that start up has been delayed because a smelting contract was not available in time.

Before The Judge

A 22-year-old Victoria man was committed for higher court trial on two cases and elected trial by judge and jury on another in Victoria provincial court.

George Earl Storry, 22, of 1544 Bank, was committed by Judge Blake Allan after preliminary hearings in connection with a Jan. 29 incident in Saanich which involved a woman and her two children and a Jan. 4 Colwood incident in which two men were slightly injured by a shotgun blast while attempting to make a night bank deposit.

Storry and Ronald James Kellington, of 3440 Seaton, were committed to stand trial on two counts of extortion and one count each of kidnapping, possession of a weapon and possession of money obtained by extortion in connection with the Saanich incident.

Allan discharged the pair on a charge of pointing a firearm after Crown counsel Nicholas Lang agreed with William McElmoyle, defence counsel for Kellington, that there was no evidence led on that charge.

The preliminary hearing took more than two days and was followed immediately by Storry's hearing on charges of attempted armed robbery, discharging a firearm and possession of a dangerous weapon.

Committal on those charges came during the mid-afternoon.

Storry is being represented by legal-aid lawyer Lenore Boyes.

Storry also appeared before Judge William Ostler on joint charges with 19-year-old Albert Norman Laberge of escaping lawful custody and being unlawfully at large.

Storry again elected trial by judge and jury while Laberge reserved his election until Tuesday, when the question of bail might be dealt with.

A former Winnipeg resident, caught in the web of a major tax audit crackdown of the hotel and restaurant industry there, received a stiff fine.

David Robert Culmer, 31, of 5184 Del Monte, pleaded guilty to income tax evasion and was fined $1,800 by Ostler.

Crown counsel Harold Turnham told the court the charge stemmed from the period Jan. 1, 1973, to April 30, 1975, when Culmer was a banquet manager of a Winnipeg hotel.

Turnham said Culmer received $2,868 in gratuities in 1973 and only reported $1,025 of that sum. In 1974, Turnham said, Culmer earned $13,778.57 in tips and only reported $2,450, making a suppressed income of $10,303.57 and an avoidance of $2,346.59 in federal income tax alone.

Turnham asked for the maximum, 100 per cent of money owing penalty but defence lawyer Robert Chamut asked for a much smaller fine because his client had paid the amount owing.

Robert Francis Churchill, of no fixed address, pleaded guilty Wednesday to theft under $200.

Defence-lawyer Clifford Watt, arguing for a lengthy probation and direction to seek psychiatric help, admitted his client was "a bit of a con man" who was not happy with his station in life and desired to live somewhat beyond his means.

However, Ostler reminded Watt that his client already had the chance to do that and rejected the offer of a long probation.

A 43-year-old Alberta man arrested recently when he got off a plane at Pat Bay airport pleaded guilty to a Nov. 6, 1974, charge of impaired driving and was jailed 21 days.

Thomas William Boon, who also pleaded guilty to driving while prohibited, failed to appear Nov. 25, 1974, in Victoria provincial court, court was told, and a warrant for his arrest was issued and had been oustanding since that time.

Mulligan told the court Boon had previous convictions for related offences in 1973 and 1974 and also said Boon appeared Dec. 29, 1976, before Judge Harold Alder in Victoria court, but under his brother-in-law's name, Jack Albert Hungle.

Ostler was advised that Boon pleaded guilty at that time to having a blood-alcohol reading over .08 and was fined $500 under Hungle's name. Police caught up with the ruse after checking fingerprints.

In addition to the jail sentence, Ostler fined Boon $200 on the other charge.

Congress Attacks Sweetener Ban

Times News Services

A move was begun in the U.S. Congress Friday to challenge the ban ordered this week by the Food and Drug Administration on the artificial sweetener saccharin.

In the Senate, the Labor Committee's subcommittee on Health said it will hold hearings on the FDA saccharin order later this spring, and on the House side Rep. Paul G. Rogers (D-Fla.) called hearings to begin a week from Monday under the jurisdiction of the subcommittee on Health and the Environment which he chairs.

Witnesses will include officials of the FDA and the companies that make saccharin.

At the same time, Rep. James Martin (R-N.C.) introduced a resolution calling for the FDA ban to be delayed until Congress holds hearings and finds "that normal consumption of saccharin is unsafe."

"The FDA research establishes that saccharin is potentially carcinogenic if consumed in large enough quantities," Martin said in a letter he sent to all members of congress.

"My calculation is that a consumption rate of about 800 cans of diet drinks a day is therefore dangerous."

The FDA ordered the ban on saccharin when Canadian tests showed that saccharin caused bladder cancers in rats. The Canadian tests involved two groups of 100 rats each that were fed diets that consisted of 5 per cent saccharin. Large doses are necessary in testing laboratory animals, partly because they live such a short time.

The congressmen point to a U.S. study involving monkeys which did not prove a high incidence of cancer after doses of saccharine were administered.

Dr. Alex Morrison, head of the health protection branch, said the U.S. study conducted by Dr. Frederick Coulston of the Albany, N.Y. Medical Centre involved too few animals. Only six monkeys were used over too short a period of time to prove saccharin was harmless, he said.

"We're completely aware of that study because we helped finance it and did some of the urine analysis," Morrison said.

"You must remember that in our rat studies it took two generations for the bladder tumors to appear and 6½ years is hardly two monkey lifetimes."

Charges by spokesmen of American companies which either use or manufacture saccharin saying the three-year Canadian health department study is "scientifically flimsy" are unfounded, he said.

Alta. Sees $248M Surplus

By LORRAINE GIBEAULT

EDMONTON (CP) — A large increase in spending on the province's natural gas price protection plan pushed the 1977-78 budget 1.1 per cent over the government's anticipated 10-per-cent limit on spending increases, Provincial Treasurer Merv Leitch said Friday night.

A 50-per-cent boost to $105 million in funds allocated to the plan, which reduces natural gas price increases for Alberta consumers, highlighted Leitch's spending estimates for the fiscal year beginning April 1.

He presented a $3.329-billion budget forecasting a $248-million surplus in a year to be marked by government spending restraint.

But he said the price protection plan "was of such vital importance" to Albertans that the Progressive Conservative government decided it should be expanded and exempted from the 10-per-cent guidelines announced last November.

The government applied restraints most severely to its own operations, where anticipated spending of $1.116 billion is an increase of 7.7 per cent over that of the current fiscal year, which ends March 31.

There were no tax changes in the budget, but Leitch said some Alberta taxpayers would notice minor changes in assessments due to new federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, which provide a transfer of some tax points to the provinces from the federal government.

Leitch said the mechanics of the transfer would account for any tax differences.

For example, a person with a taxable income of $7,000 would pay $12 less tax under the new arrangement, while someone earning $30,000 in taxable income would pay $28 more.

The same arrangements account for an additional 1.3 per cent increase in spending proposals over 1976-77, but Leitch explained it was not in fact an increase in spending.

It results from $40 million in federal money going into the budget instead of directly to the Alberta Health Care Insurance Commission, as was the case under previous federal-provincial agreement.

The budget also promised increased unconditional assistance to municipalities, more money for public and senior citizens housing, a 350-per-cent increase in library grants and expanded education programs, especially for smaller schools.

BIRCH TREES NEW SUGAR?

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — Birch trees contain a natural sweetener that might be a good replacement for saccharine, and will even be good for people's teeth, a food researcher says.

The carbohydrate xylitol has the same number of calories as sugar, but does not produce fat, says Dr. A. L. Branen, who has begun testing the chemical on pigtail monkeys.

Xylitol is found naturally in many fruits and vegetables, and is used as an artificial sweetener in Finland, which has huge stands of birch forest, Branen says.

Canada has banned saccharine — the artificial sweetener most widely used in the country — because of experiments which indicated rats fed large doses developed cancer.

Xylitol looks and tastes much like sugar, but does not have the same effect on persons suffering from diabetes because there is no increase in sucrose, Branen says.

Xylitol, unlike many other sweeteners, actually might prevent fat formation in the body, so could have applications in the problems of heart disease and obesity, Branen says.

Jeers to Cheers For PM in Quebec

Time News Services

MONTREAL — Audiences greeted Prime Minister Trudeau on a one-day Quebec swing Friday with the full gamut of receptions ranging from loud boos to lusty cheers.

The boos came early in the day from striking flour mill workers; the cheers when he spoke later at a special citizen ship ceremony.

Waving Canadian flags, about 2,000 persons cheered heartily when Trudeau told them that separatism will be overcome by their desire to keep the country unified.

Trudeau told the crowd, composed mainly of recent immigrants, that they should not be slaves to their past, but should work towards Canadian unity.

It takes both emotion and reason to hold a country together, Trudeau said.

The jubilant mood contrasted markedly with the prime minister's earlier visit to the Montreal suburb of Verdun where he was loudly booed by the striking flour mill workers protesting an anti-inflation board ruling.

About 50 demonstrators, carrying placards saying "Down with the Trudeau law," had been waiting for more than an hour.

When the prime minister arrived the crowd had grown to about 300 people in front of the Verdun City hall.

Several people were almost knocked down by police motorcycles.

Trudeau, accompanied by Health Minister Marc Lalonde, was quickly escorted into the city hall to meet municipal officials, including Mayor J. Albert Garipy, and to sign the city's guest book.

Urban Affairs Minister Andre Ouellett, who had arrived a few minutes before the prime minister, talked briefly with the demonstrators and was repeatedly heckled.

The workers, affiliated with the Confederation of National Trade Unions, complained that their negotiated wage increase was reduced to eight per cent from 11 per cent by the federal anti-inflation board.

They have been off the job since Feb. 4 to protest the ruling.

Ouellet told the workers that his salary increase had also been reduced under anti-inflation guidelines.

Earlier in Ste. Therese, about 600 college students were relatively tranquil during a question-and-answer session with the prime minister despite the distribution of leaflets ordering him "to go home" and defacement of posters announcing his visit.

While entering the French-language college, about 30 miles north of Montreal, Trudeau received a sprinkling of applause which later was replaced by a few boos.

The most negative reaction was reserved for answers to questions focusing on Quebecers' language and civil rights.

The heartiest applause of the one-hour session was reserved for a student who asked the prime minister whether the army would be sent into Quebec if independence was declared.

The student had compared that hypothetical event with the 1970 October crises, when the War Measures Act was legislated in response to kidnappings of two political figures in Quebec.

Likewise, he said he hoped Quebec would not separate by force.

Another student rebuked Trudeau for refusing a request by Social Credit MP Rene Matte and Quebec author Pierre Vallieres to initiate a new inquiry into the kidnappings. Trudeau said Thursday he would co-operate with such an inquiry.

FORMER FLQ terrorist Pierre Vallieres claims that the federal government is fabricating a situation whereby it could move troops into Quebec — harkening back to the October Crisis of 1970 and the the declaration of the War Measures Act which followed a double kidnapping and a murder by the FLQ.

Separatism Just Plain Madness: Hutchison

CALGARY (CP) — Separatism is "just plain madness" that would impoverish the fragments of Canada and facilitate a complete takeover by the United States, according to Bruce Hutchison, editorial director of the Vancouver Sun.

Speaking to the Canadian Club, he said even Alberta could not escape "the impoverishment for long."

A separate Quebec would find its culture identity engulfed by the overpowering influence of the Americans, he claimed.

Meanwhile, the two remaining English fragments would disintegrate into smaller units that "would soon petition for entry into the great republic to the south — on its terms."

"Our greatest achievement is the partnership — never easy, always clumsy and prickly — of two diverse peoples," Hutchison said.

"The first step is dissolving the national state of Canada. The rest will follow naturally and rapidly."

He said separatists are ignoring the intangible benefits of a country combining to cultures in a dual state.

"Now, we've begun to debate the dismemberment of the nation as if it were a failure," he said, adding the debates wrongly depict the country as a corporation rather than a nation based on tolerance of differences and give and take.

"In non-economic terms, this proposition (separatism) makes no sense."

Canada now is enduring the backlash of a post-war euphoria that inflamed the desires beyond the abilities of Canadians to satisfy them, he said.

This backlash has driven "us" into increasing reliance on foreign loans and pushed our productivity rate to one of the lowest in the world."

"Canada is not dying," he said. "It's suffering the withdrawal symptoms of a long economic debauch."

Special UN Meet Status Denied

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government has refused to give special status to Quebec at a United Nations conference despite a threat by the province to boycott the meetings, officials said Friday.

They said the province demanded special status on a federal - provincial delegation that will attend the UN conference on water in Mar del Plata, Argentina, next week.

In the end the province got no more than Prince Edward Island, Ontario, Saskatchewan and Manitoba — two delegates each on a Canadian delegation of 20 persons and all the advisers they want.

The UN conference is to look at the water resources around the world to see, first, how they can be preserved and, second, how the ever-widening dry areas of the world can be served.

Quebec and the other four provinces expressed strong interest in the conference and talks started last summer on their involvement in the delegation that will be led by Ray Perrault of British Columbia, government leader in the Senate.

UNITY GROUP

OTTAWA (FP) — A new group called Commitment Canada is about to join the ranks of organizations being set up to promote nation unity as a result of the election of the Parti Quebecois.

The new movement which organizers hope will focus on the "grass roots" is to be officially launched with a meeting Monday on Parliament Hill.

Organizers of Commitment Canada are to outline their plans and announced their programs at a briefing session for MPs.

An advance notice of the briefing says the movement is "a national volunteer organization formed to provide a focus for expressions of national unity by Canadians from all walks of life."

PQ Defeat Forecast

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — Jean Chretien, federal minister of industry, trade and commerce, said Friday he expects the Parti Quebecois to be defeated in the next Quebec election.

"A lot of my friends voted PQ, not because they wanted to separate but because they wanted to get rid of former premier, Robert Bourassa," Chretien said in an interview.

"Bourassa wasn't corrupt as some have tried to make out. He was just inept."

He called on Canadians to stop "petty bitching" about the language on box tops and in airport towers and to do their part to ensure Quebec stays in Canada.

National Food Policy Sought In Wake of Big Price Jumps

OTTAWA (CP)— Opposition MPs renewed demands Friday for a federal food policy and for a statement about plans to end wage and price controls after figures were published showing a sharp jump in the February inflation rate.

Statistics Canada reported Friday that the consumer price index had jumped nine-tenths of one per cent during February, mainly because of a second consecutive month of large food price increases.

In the Commons, James McGrath said inflation likely will worsen later this year because there may be drought conditions affecting crops in Western Canada.

Finance Minister Donald Macdonald noted that food prices still are rising at a lower rate than they were two years ago.

He rejected McGrath's suggestion that there is a contest within cabinet between Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan and Consumer Affairs Minister Tony Abbott that is preventing the government from developing some kind of national strategy to control food price rises while ensuring producers a fair return.

Macdonald said a national food policyy is no protection against conditions, like droughts, that affect crops.

Sinclair Stevens asked Macdonald whether the government still feels it can meet its stated target of a six-per-cent inflation rate by the end of this year.

Macdonald said the rise in food prices during January and February had been anticipated. If enough control is exercised over non-food items measured by the consumer price index, particularly services, then six per cent remains an attainable target.

February was the second successive month in which food prices rose strongly, after a year of relative price stability. Fresh produce, particularly vegetables, pushed consumer costs up in Febuary.

DIEFENBAKER RAISES A BURNING ISSUE

OTTAWA (CP) — John Diefenbaker pleaded with the government Friday to join in a round-the-world burning of bonfires June 6 to celebrate the Queen's silver jubilee.

Diefenbaker, 81, cited reports that Canada, because of costs, would not be taking part in a celebration whereby bonfires would be ignited in various Commonwealth countries, the burning to be covered by television and relayed by satellite around the Commonwealth.

"Surely the government is not going to follow a niggardly policy," Diefenbaker protested in the Commons.

"I remember that we did have some discussion on the feasibility of lighting bonfires," replied John Roberts, secretary of state.

He added, tongue in cheek: "I will have to consider not only the cost of starting the fires, but the cost of putting them out.

"I will look into the question and report back."

OPTION OFFERED NORTH

Times News Services

OTTAWA — An alternative to a public inquiry into the steps towards provincehood was offered to the Northwest Territories legislative council Friday by Northern Affairs Minister Warren Allmand.

Allmand, who summoned the council here for a special meeting, offered to appoint a special representative to consult fulltime with council on future political development.

The 15-member elected council has refused to approve the territorial government's $243 million budget for fiscal 1977-78 until Ottawa agrees to a public inquiry. The N.W.T. government needs the money for April 1.

The president of the Indian Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories said, meanwhile, that an Indian government in the north would control profits earned by resource industries of the Indian

Oil Spills Not Harmful?

By MARGOT HORNBLOWER
Washington Post

NEW ORLEANS — Offshore oil pollution is a nuisance, but there is not much hard evidence that spills have any long-term effect of marine or plant life, oil spill experts here say.

Nor is oil pollution a human health hazard, as far as scientists have been able to determine, said representatives of industry, universities and the Environmental Protection Agency at a conference on oil spills.

"I've never heard of a permanently crippled environment because of an oil spill," said Kenneth Biglane, the Environmental Protection Agency's chief oil spill expert. But EPA is sponsoring expensive research because, he said, "We don't know the full effect of oil on the enviroment, and so long as there's any doubt the public is concerned."

Science may never provide an absolute answer. But as more than a dozen papers presented here this week shows, evidence is mounting from government, industry and university research, that nature is absorbing oil spills with little trauma.

On Feb. 2, 1976, a barge sunk at the mouth of the Potomac River spilling 250,000 gallons of sticky black oil into Chesapeake Bay. Beaches and marshes were fouled, thousands of birds were killed and Virginia officials predicted dire consequences for the area's shellfish industry.

However, after a six-week cleanup, the beaches were virtually free of oil. In a few months the march grass had grown back thicker than before. And, after an eight-month study, the Virginia Institute of Marine Science found no effect on mussels and oysters.

The case of the Chesapeake Bay spill, reported at a conference of oil-spill experts here, is sot unusual. Despite public outcry over a rash of recent tanker accidents, the danger of oil spills appears to have been exaggerated.

When James N. Butler, a Harvard chemistry professor, started oil-pollution research six years ago, he recalled, "Jacques Cousteau (the undersea explorer) was saying that the oceans were dying and I was fairly alarmed. But the longer "I've been in the business, the less true that seems to be."

Butler studied tar lumps from oil tanker discharges in the central Atlantic and found no discernible effect on ocean plants or animals. Other scientists, under contract from the American Petroleum Insti-

Fishboat Sinks

A 59-foot packer loaded with herring sank this morning in Georgia Strait, the seventh fishing boat that has foundered since the herring season started.

A spokesman at Pacific Rescue Centre said the two crew members aboard the B.C. Bird reported the vessel taking on water at 9:02 a.m. about mid-way between Bowen Island and Nanaimo.

Eighteen minutes later the centre received word the boat had sunk. The crewmen were picked up by a passing fishboat, the Helen 2.

KITIMAT PROBER WELCOMED

VANCOUVER (CP) — Environmental and pipeline spokesmen are happy with the choice of Andrew Thompson as head of a public inquiry into the proposed Kitimat, oil port and tanker route, but are disappointed with the time allowed for the inquiry.

"We're very disappointed in the time frame," Jack Cressey, project manager of the proposed Kitimat-to-Edmonton pipeline, said in an interview Friday.

He said construction of the project should begin no later than next winter to meet the needs of the United States to have crude oil by April, 1979, "and there is no hope under this schedule."

The consortium behind the $500 million proposed pipeline will reevaluate its plans in light of the delay, he said. "We have to look at whether all of our partners want to continue in — because if they don't, the project will just have to be aborted."

Justice Minister Ron Basford announced Friday that Thompson, a university of British Columbia law Professor specializing in environmental law and a former chairman of the B.C. Energy full-scale public inquiry. Commission, would head the Cressey and environmental spokesmen said they are extremely pleased with the government's decision.

"We couldn't be happier with the government's choice," said Gary Gallon, executive director of the scientific pollution and environmental control society.

"He's fair, he won't kowtow to the federal government, he has a mind of his own and we have observed his work," Gallon said.

Thompson, energy commission chairman from 1973 to 1975, also was a founding member of the Canadian Petroleum Law Foundation and is on its board of directrors.

He is chairman of the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee.

KANSAS CITY — Parts of the western plains remained paralysed early today after a blizzard dumped about 30 centimetres (12 inches) of snow in some area, stranding motorists, disrupting utilities and blowing away topsoil from already stripped fields.

In Kansas, two farmers were reported missing, one since Thursday night, as blowing snow hampered traffic.

Five deaths were blamed on the storm in Colorado. Three persons died when their car overturned on a snow-covered highway, and the bodies of two men were found in a wrecker stranded in snow near Colorado Springs.

The snow turned to rain in some areas, but a second storm was forecast to enter the area last Sunday.

Highways on three sides of Denver were blocked by snow that was being pushed into drifts by winds gusting up to 150 kilometres an hour (95 m.p.h.)

The closing of Interstate 70 and U.S. 36 stranded 200 people in the town of Strasburg, Colo., 40 miles east of Denver, doubling the town's population.

Tornadoes tore up trees, and knocked down homes in other western and plains states.

Eastern states, meanwhile basked in record wormth.

Tornadoes were reported Friday in Texas, Louisiana and Missouri. One tornado touched down near Marshall, Tex., leaving a swath of uprooted trees in its wake.

"It's lousy. Sixty mile an hour winds — gusts up to 75. (96.5 — 120.6 k.p.h.)

There's no moisture anywhere," said a sherriff's spokesman in Potter County. "The dirt is about to blow us all away."

The weather wasn't affecting plans to open the annual Rattlesnake Roundup at Sweetwater, Tex., where more than 5,000 pounds of snakes already were waiting.

Tornadoes also crerated havoc in northeastern Louisiana, but no injuries were reported. Another tornado hit Isabella, Mo., injuring at least one mibile home resident.

Agriculture officials in Colorado said the moisture will help parched fields, but said the areas that received no snow were damaged by the high winds, and traffic in some areas with little snow was hindered by blowing dust. (See picture on Page 2.)

Fire Risk After Pot Count?

VANCOUVER (CP) — A human rights board of inquiry reserved decision Friday on whether the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia committed discrimination when it cancelled the fire insurance of a man who had been charged with trafficking in marijuana.

Leon Getz, chairman of the one-man board, said he would announce his decision next week.

Stein Gudmundseth, lawyer for the human rights commission, argued that there were no reasonable grounds under the human rights code for ICBC to cancel the fire insurance held by Robert Heerspink on two buildings in Sidney.

Heerspink's trial on the marijuana charge comes up in Victoria provincial court next week.

Gudmundseth argued that in argujng for the right to cancel Heerspink's insurance ICBC was seeking the right "to be arbitrary, to be reckless and to discriminate."

The human rights commission argued that under the code the only grounds for discell a policy within 15 days sex, which may be considered in assessing risk.

Ken Mackenzie, lawyer for ICBC, said insurance law specifically allows ICBC to cancell a policy witin 15 days after sending notice by registered mail, as was done in the case of Heerspink.

Ship-Building Boost 'Too Late' for Yarrows

The general manager of Yarrows said today increased federal subsidies for the shipbuilding industry still won't make B.C. competitive with foreign shipyards but should bring some "spinoff" business.

Don Challinor was commenting on word from Ottawa Friday that shipbuilding subsidies offered by the government are being increased from 12 to 20 per cent immediately to avoid imminent layoffs in the industry.

As far as the West Coast is concerned, the help comes far too late to avoid layofffs, he said. The Esquimalt yard had about 900 workers last summer and that's now just over 100.

While there are no new construction contracts in sight, Challinor did say ship repair work is starting to pick up and he anticipates Yarrows will be busy, with a payroll of 400 to 500, by summer.

In Ottawa Friday, Industry Minister Jean Chretien said Canada is suffering from a worldwide downturn in the freight shipping market and overcapacity in the international industry.

Canadian shipyards were faced with intense competition from foreign shipbuilders who can count on extensive support from their governments, Chretien said.

Without new orders in the immediate future the industry could be faced with layoffs of 4,000 by the end of the year.

In B.C., Yarrows and Burrard Dry Dock in North Vancouver have about half of the province's shipbuilding capacity.

Chretien said the subsidy increase could cost up to $30 million over the next three years, depending upon its success in attracting new shipbuilding business.

The increased subsidies are effective immediately and will be offered an applications received between March 1 and Aug. 31. The government will consider further action later in the year.

The August deadline was set because orders must be received by then to avert layoffs in shipyards during 1978.

Review Rules Eased

OTTAWA (CP) — The government announced a loosening of Foreign Investment Review Act regulations Friday to allow foreign importing and distributing firms operating in Canada to set up new manufactuting businesses without being subject to review.

At present, takeover and new investment proposals by foreign-controlled companies are not permitted unless the firms can show there will be significant benefit — such as new jobs — to the country.

The new regulations also include provisions that would allow quicker review of takeovers and new investments involving less than $2 million in gross assets and less than 100 employees.

Industry Minister Jean Chretien said in a news release the changes recognize the relation between an established importing and distributing firm bringing in certain products and the setting up of a new business to assemble or manufacture those products.

NEW YORK (UPI) — Quebec's Parti Quebecois government has received a vote of confidence from Moody's Investors Services with its announcement the election of the separatist government will not affect the AA rating of Quebec's provincial and hydro bonds.

The "factors of strength" for the bonds were not changed by the election so they will retain their designation as "high quality" issues, according to Moodys, one of the two leading U.S. bond rating services.

Islands Trust Changes Called Illegal

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

Changes to the Islands Trust Act proposed by the Social Credit government may be unconstitutional and illegal, Victoria NDP MLA Chas. Barber said Friday.

Liberal leader Gordon Gibson also attacked the bill in the legislature and introduced an amendment which would postpone any consideration of the changes for six months, a traditional "hoist" motion.

The Islands Trust Amendment Act, introduced last month by Municipal Affairs and Housing Minister Hugh Curtis, would remove responsibility for planning and zoning functions on the Gulf Islands from the regional districts and give it to the Islands Trust.

The Islands Trust is comprised of three general trustees, appointed by the provincial government, and two trustees from each of the 13 major Gulf Islands designated in the act. The two local trustees who are elected by their own island residents, sit on the trust only on matters concering their particular island.

Barber said the amendment to the act may be unconstitutional because it gives greater power to the local trustees that they were originally elected to possess.

If Curtis called an election for the island trustees, that would be all right because residents would vote for the trustees on the clear understanding they would now have the power of planning and zoning functions, Barber said.

"But this seems most certainly unconstitutional."

Barber said the introduction of the amendments has caused such conflict and hostility between the regional districts and the Islands Trust that they will probably never be able to work together again.

The change upsets the balance of power that had been established between the trust and the regional districts.

The seven regional districts involved have already asked for a meeting with the premier and Curtis to discus the amendments. Initial reactions from the districts is strongly opposed to the increase in power of the trust.

Barber said the changes introduced by Curtis fail to pass what he call the "Gaglardi test."

He said he would probably trust Curtis who had a good reputation among municipalities, to appoint good people to be general trustees, "but would you trust Phil Gaglardi (the rambunctious former highways minister) to be re-

City Holidaymakers Fail In Suit Against Totem

By ROGER STONEBANKS
Times Staff

Court action by four disappointed holidaymakers against a Victoria travel agency has been dismissed in a 17-page decision by county court Judge E. J. C. Stewart.

The four — Richard Barnswell and Marion Will of Victoria and Kenneth and Audrey Meek of Calgary — sued Totem Travel Service Limited of Victoria for alleged breach of contract and misrepresentation, claiming their Tahiti vacation turned into a nightmare and they left.

They complained of landing exhausted from a sleepless flight, being subjected to dirty linen, insects and salamanders infesting their room, a flooded bathroom, fleabites, terrible meals and rude staff.

Other witnesses in the same time in December, 1974, told an opposite story, saying they had beautiful vacations, no complaints and would return.

Most of the evidence was heard last April and May but the case had to be adjourned To Nov. 17 for completion because it over-ran alloted court time. Judgment was given Friday.

Reviewing information given by Totem Travel in brochures advertising the Club Mediterranee resort at Moorea, Judge Stewart said he could not find the information "generally speaking" untrue or improper material to be inserted in brochures.

"I am satisfied that the plaintiffs (the four holidaymakers) did not find the facilities, services and atmosphere up to the standards they were entitled to expect from the information contained in the brochures," said Judge Stewart.

"The Club Mediteranee failed to meet its standards as far as the plaintiffs were concerned.

"Whether there was breach of contract on the part of the Club Mediterranee is not the issue here. The issue is whether the defendant (Totem Travel) can be held responsible for the misfortunes of the plaintiffs.

"The negligence alleged against the defendants is that they held out the Club Mediterranee to be excellent accommodation when they knew or ought to have known the said accommodation was totally unacceptable both generally and as to the plaintiffs needs in particular.

"It is not a fact that the accommodation was totally unacceptable generally. It was unacceptable to the plaintiffs but there is no way, in my opinion, that the defendants could have anticipated this reaction by the plaintiffs.

"It is also alleged that the defendants were negligent in failing to obtain sufficient in-

"It is also alleged that the defendants were negligent in failing to obtain ssufficient information as to the accommodation arrangements at the Club Mediterranee, when they knew or ought to have known that the information they were giving" to one of the plaintiffs would be relied upon by the others.

"On the evidence before me I would have to find that even if the dendants had sent their scout to the premises of the Club Mediterrancee on the Island of Moorea they would have had no reason to change their general opinion of the place as a holiday resort."

Judge Stewart said the "most effective" method of checking advertising material is to consider reports of people who have visited an area.

"In this case the defendants had had no adverse reports from any client visiting the premises of the Club Mediterranee in Tahiti but had had favorable reports. Furthermore, the Club Mediterranee is well known in the travel industry and finds favor with many people."

Discussing the conflicting accounts about conditions in December, 1974, at Moorea, Judge Stewart said "it is difficult to believe" they described the same general scene.

"But they did and I substantially believe them all. It's a good example of the difference in human tastes, patience and reactions," he said.

Judge Stewart said "the only basis, it seems to me" on which a travel agency could be held responsible for an experience as described by the plaintiffs would arise from the duty to assess accurately the likes, dislikes and reactions of individuals.

"Even if this was humanly possible there was in my opinion in this case no way in which Mr. (John) Hampton (of Totem Travel) could have foreseen the situation described by the plaintiffs.

"A travel agent has to use reasonable care in disseminating information to clients, but on the evidence in this case this duty was fulfilled by the defendants.

"No matter how one approaches the matter the plaintiffs claims must fail.

"The statements attributed to the defendants have not been proven generally untrue. There has been no breach of contract. Even if any incorrect information was given to the plaintiffs directly or indirectly there has been no negligence established on the part of the defendants."

He said the "mistake" of the four holidaymakers "was due in my opinion to a failure to assess accurately the material in the brochures and this was aggravated by some failure on the part of the staff of Club Mediterranee in their obligations to the plaintiffs as guests.

"Whether the trip to Takiti was a mistake from the beginning, or whether facilities of the Club Mediterranee proved totally unacceptable because of failure of that organization to meet its contractual obligations, the defendants cannot be held accountable for the resulting disasters."

Tremor Shakes Singapore

SINGAPORE (Reuter) — Hundreds of people fled from high-rise apartment buildings when a slight earth tremor shook Singapore on Wednesday. A meteorological department spokesman said the tremor was caused by an earthquake off the west coast of the Indonesian island of Sumatra about 300 miles from here. There were no reports of damage or casualties.

Nuclear Merits Debated

A public debate between nuclear disarmament authority Prof. William Epstein and Lt.-Gen. Reg Lane, former deputy commander in chief of the North American Air Defence Command (NORAD), will be held at 12:30 p.m. Wednesday, March 23, in the University of Victoria's old gymnasium.

Titled, Survival in a Nuclear Age, the debate is on whether nuclear weapons can still be relied upon as a deterrent.

The moderator will be university president Dr. Howard Petch.

Epstein, a visiting professor at UVic, is retired director of the United Nations Secretariat's disarmament division. He's now a consultant to the UN and is an outspoken critic of the nuclear arms race.

He was recently awarded Mexico's highest civil decoration, the Order of the Aztec Eagle, in recognition of his work in establishing a nuclear-free zone in Latin America.

Lane was the senior Canadian officer in NORAD when he retired two years ago.

Debate organizer Fraser Homer-Dixon, a UVic student senator, says "forced confrontation" between the two should be an educational experience.

A six-minute statement will be given by Epstein, followed by a similar one by Lane. Then will follow four-minute rebuttals and 20 minutes of discussion. The event will end with a 10-minute question period.

The debate is free and open to the public. It is being sponsored by the Alma Mater Society and Student and Ancillary Services.

Chance to Set the Handicapped Free

Local Group Helps Them Have Fun—But Needs Help Itself

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

Scattered throughout Greater Victoria are many hundreds of men and women, girls and boys, who in a subtle and deadly way are prisoners of our social system.

We're the jailers without knowing it.

Today, tomorrow and the next day the little things which give our lives a tang and color are out of reach for them, not as punishment but simply because the rest of us haven't noticed yet and decided to do something about it.

Not that these prisoners aren't supplied their basic needs because they are. We give some a pension and others we shelter in big clean "institutions" where they are fed right on time every day. Some are even taken to the bathroom on a sort of sechedule.

They have their own lives — of sorts. But the joyful juice of a little freedom just for the fun of it is missing.

Things like taking off on a whim to a movie, or for a beer, or to go skating. Like the quick trip down to the store for a carton of milk or toothpaste or a package of nuts. Like window shopping or fiddling with a new menu in a kitchen.

Like going to a party at someone else's house or going camping in a tent at Goldstream or jumping on a trampoline in the school gym or looking over the water at East Sooke Park or stopping for pizza or a Big Mac.

Little things when they're handy but big things when they're not.

How do you do these things when you're stuck in a wheelchair, your mind clear but your arms and legs always shaking? Or when you can walk and maybe even run but brain damage has left the world in a fog for you? Or when you can think but not hear or speak?

We call these people "the handicapped" because it's a nice neat word. We see they exist but without some room for fun that's not the same as living.

A little more than a year ago a handful of young people in Victoria organized a society to see handicapped people had the chance for a little fun.

The Victoria Society for the Recreation of Handicapped Persons has bumped along since then on sporadic government grants and some help from local service clubs and individuals.

They've developed a wealth of activities for children, teens and adults and the best measure of their success is that about 200 handicapped people a month turn out for them.

The society operates from a storefront office at 2535 Government St. and has a full-time staff of eight headed by Judith Armstrong, 24, assisted by Alan Currie, 35. Throughout the community about 80 volunteers donate time and effort to keep the recreation programs going.

The society got under way in November of 1975 with a federal Local Initiatives grant for $36,810. It got another LIP grant of $20,400 for expanded services last November. In between it got a $30,000 grant from Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy last June. The provincial government is now considering further financing.

Meanwhile the society is almost out of moneyy. and needs help from the public. So the Victoria Times, in co-operation with radio station CJVI, is today launching an appeal.

The target: at least $20,000 to help keep the society's 17 programs going.

Every day for the rest of this month we'll tell you more about the children, teens and adults this group helps, how they help and how those helped feel about it.

We hope you" comme to appreciate as we do that this is an organization worth backing. If the provincial government sees solid public support for it, provincial support is more likely.

Most of the money donated will go to pay for the staff of eight who double up on chores to keep the recreation programs going.

The co-ordinator is paid $184 a week, the assistant co-ordinator $175 and the six other workers $140 weekly while the money lasts.

Paul Taylor, a certified general accountant, is a volunteer who will be keeping track of the fund-raising campaign.

The society has applied for a tax registration number which would make contributions tax deductible. Receipts will be mailed on request.

'Sure You Can'

Helping hand and warm words from Judith Armstrong give Terry Van Noordt, 10, the boost she needs to try the trampoline at Henderson Park recreation centre. After-school gym class for children has turned into one of the most popular programs offered the handicapped by local organization Judith heads.

Sidney Braced For Dry Time After Ruling

A ruling by the B.C. Building Code Appeal Board could have disastrous effects on the town of Sidney and lead to serious water problems this summer.

Ald. Jerry Tregaskis said today he was "absolutely floored" by the board's decision to allow Sidney resident Paul Walker the right to develop two lots. Tregaskis said Walker had been denied a building permit because neither lot was connected to the municipal water system.

But Walker, represented by a Victoria lawyer, argued successfully he had private wells on the lots, and noted neither North Saanich nor Central Saanich, the two other Saanich Peninsula municipalities, deny permits on lots without water connections.

Tregaskis said Sidney has about 700 other applicants in the same position as Walker who have been denied permits solely because of the town's inability to provide an adequate water supply.

"Our water system is already strained to capacity," Tregaskis said. "If the board's decision means we have to give permits to all 700 applicants we've got problems. It will be disastrous."

He said he understood the town solicitor is appailing the decision.

Treagskis said he fears if private wells are used for domestic purposes the ground water level may drop so low the results would be drastic.

Sidney gets about halt its water supply from four municipal wells and purchases the rest from Central Saanich which has a lease for Elk Lake water.

Tregaskis said the water problems in Sidney will not abate until the new permanent line connecting the town to the Victoria water system is completed next year.

26 More Heart Attacks

What does the saccharin ban announced by the federal government this week mean to the Capital district?

Another three-quarters of a million pounds or so around waistlines and 26 more heart attacks a year, that's what.

If statements made by a New York cardiologist after announcement of the saccharin ban in Canada and the U.S. are applied locally, that's what the effect works out to.

Bruce Halliday (PC — Oxford) said in the commons Friday that across Canada, a switch to sugar means Canadians could gain an extra 60 million pounds of weight and suffer an extra 2,500 heart attacks a year.

$4.1M APPROVED FOR NEW WINGS

The provincial government Friday gave the University of Victoria a $4.1 million financial lift for new construction but it's only a drop in the bucket compared with the university's five-year projected capital needs.

A total of $3,2220,000 will go towards construction of a new music wing in the MacLaurin Building, while the remaining $885,000 will be used to pay the bills for the already completed third wing of the Clearihue Building.

UVic vice-president George Pederson is pleased with the money but said it fell far short of the five-year building program projected to cost $42 million.

The government also approved $7.8 million construction for Simon Fraser and $3.7 million construction for University of British Columbia, the two other public universities in the province.

At Simon Fraser the money will go towards building a facility for the education faculty, the archeology department, and a French-language training centre.

At UBC a library processing centre will be built and work started on a $5.7 million aquatic centre.

One-Way Road for Missionaries

max low

Take today. At this minute, three young Americans — would-be missionaries threatened with deportation — are safely back on their own side of the border after being told they couldn't stay in Canada and study at a school that didn't exist, anyway.

Puzzling? Sure it is.

The three — Terry Brooks, 22, Connie Haugen, 22, and 19-year-old Alison Woelke — had all travelled more than 2,000 miles from Tucson, Arizona, to take a course at Victoria's new Highway Missionary Training Centre.

They were not made welcome in this country. In fact, they were made to feel distinctly unwelcome! Yet they are not bitter. As Alison told me, bitterness is not a Christian quality. But they are sad they've been made to leave and baffled by the official reception given them by their northern neighbors.

The three young Americans had worked with Canadian missionaries in Arizona and California and decided they would like to renew acquaintances and work with them again up here. So they applied to enrol at the Highway Missionary Centre. So far so good.

Jim Palosaari, who has been involved with the Upper Room Society which helps down-and-outs in the street, helps run the centre from a recently-converted old house at 228 Edward Street in Vic West.

The theory is, the would-be missionaries undergo two six-week sessions of spiritual training, and instruction in first aid and basic car mechanics and then set out as a sort of mobile church patrolling the island's highways. Using two converted Volkswagen vans with the words Highway Missionaries emblazoned on the side, they will travel between Victoria and Campbell River and from Parksville over to Tofino and back all summer picking up hitch-hikers, taking them a stretch of their journey and warming them with a cup of coffee and the word of God.

Now some may not think that's such a great idea. Each to his own. But the thing is: surely a few American kids should be allowed to join with their Canadian friends and be a part of something they believe in. What harm can they do? Where's the crime?

There isn't one, of course. Yet Terry and Alison (Connie couldn't stand the pressure on her any longer and left for the U.S. Wednesday) told me Thursday they were treated like criminals and undesirables at the border by arrogant Canadian immigration authorities. The trouble, Palosaari believes, stems from the fact they were too honest.

"When the Americans said they'd like to come up, we called the Canadian immigration people and asked them what we should do. They said to tell them to apply for students' visas."

But at the border they were told those visas wouldn't do because the school wasn't accredited. When Palosaari challenged them and asked if the Americans could come in on the usual visitors' permits, he was told "No!"

"It's crazy," says Jim. "The reason they gave was because you can't be a visitor and study at a school — yet they don't recognize our school, anyway!"

Finally, after a great hassle, the three were let in on a one-week visa but their short stay wasn't peaceful.

"Bob Malcolm and a guy named Schroeder from the Immigration Department came storming in here before the week was up and said they had to be out of the country by midnight on Friday," says Palosaari, who believes their actions were part of a plan to make things awkward for him and force him to leave. (Palosaari is an American who has been here almost a year now on three-month visas that have been extended several times.)

At the suggestion of NDP-MLA Charles Barber, Jim contacted Victoria MP Allan McKinnon in Ottawa. He got a lot of sympathy and support but in the end there was nothing they could do. Time ran out and the American kids left Friday afternoon.

With someone from the Highway Missionaries Centre, they headed for Seattle where they will re-apply to re-enter Canada. Probably, some time, they'll be let in again. But isn't it all a lot of nonsense?

Most of all, the would-be missionaries were upset by the attitude taken.

"Surely they could say 'Well, this is the way it is and we're sorry,' but they don't," Palosaari says. "They really enjoy their job and the opportunity to treat us as riff-raff. One immigration guy accused us of being no more than charity cases and that's not true as we at the centre don't allow anyone to accept welfare cheques. We do odd jobs to pay our way."

"You know," Alison Woelke says distantly and with sadness, "I studied Canada when I was at school . . ."

" . . . And I was always under the impression that Canadians were gentle, reserved people."

Jeers to Cheers For PM in Quebec

Sea of hands, smiles greet Trudeau

Time News Services

MONTREAL — Audiences greeted Prime Minister Trudeau on a one-day Quebec swing Friday with the full gamut of receptions ranging from loud boos to lusty cheers.

The boos came early in the day from striking flour mill workers; the cheers when he spoke later at a special citizen ship ceremony.

Waving Canadian flags, about 2,000 persons cheered heartily when Trudeau told them that separatism will be overcome by their desire to keep the country unified.

Trudeau told the crowd, composed mainly of recent immigrants, that they should not be slaves to their past, but should work towards Canadian unity.

It takes both emotion and reason to hold a country together, Trudeau said.

"This is what makes a nation," he added.

The jubilant mood contrasted markedly with the prime minister's earlier visit to the Montreal suburb of Verdun where he was loudly booed by the striking flour mill workers protesting an anti-inflation board ruling.

About 50 demonstrators, carrying placards saying "Down with the Trudeau law," had been waiting for more than an hour.

When the prime minister arrived the crowd had grown to about 300 people in front of the Verdun City hall.

Several people were almost knocked down by police motorcycles.

Trudeau, accompanied by Health Minister Marc Lalonde, was quickly escorted into the city hall to meet municipal officials, including Mayor J. Albert Garipy, and to sign the city's guest book.

Urban Affairs Minister Andre Ouellett, who had arrived a few minutes before the prime minister, talked briefly with the demonstrators and was repeatedly heckled.

The workers, affiliated with the Confederation of National Trade Unions, complained that their negotiated wage increase was reduced to eight per cent from 11 per cent by the federal anti-inflation board.

They have been off the job since Feb. 4 to protest the ruling.

Ouellet told the workers that his salary increase had also been reduced under anti-inflation guidelines.

Earlier in Ste. Therese, about 600 college students were relatively tranquil during a question-and-answer session with the prime minister despite the distribution of leaflets ordering him "to go home" and defacement of posters announcing his visit.

While entering the French-language college, about 30 miles north of Montreal, Trudeau received a sprinkling of applause which later was replaced by a few boos.

The most negative reaction was reserved for answers to questions focusing on Quebecers' language and civil rights.

The heartiest applause of the one-hour session was reserved for a student who asked the prime minister whether the army would be sent into Quebec if independence was declared.

The student had compared that hypothetical event with the 1970 October crises, when the War Measures Act was legislated in response to kidnappings of two political figures in Quebec.

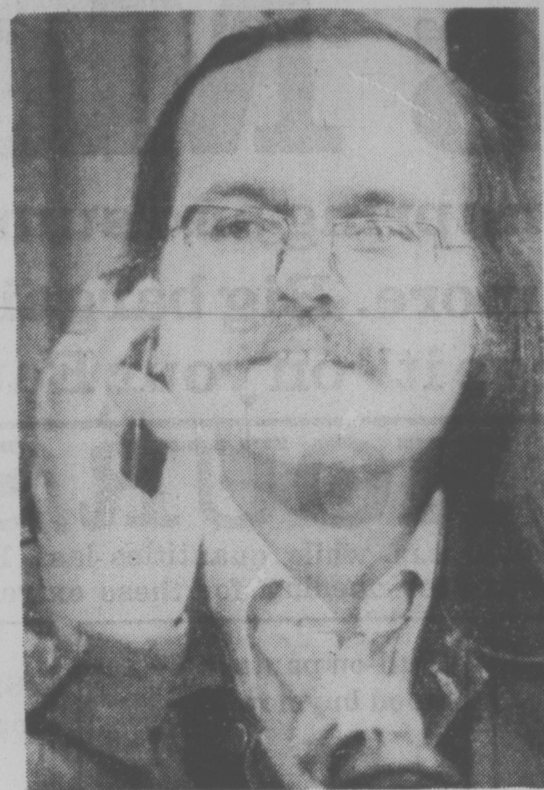
Likewise, he said he hoped Quebec would not separate by force.

Another student rebuked Trudeau for refusing a request by Social Credit MP Rene Matte and Quebec author Pierre Vallieres to initiate a new inquiry into the kidnappings. Trudeau said Thursday he would co-operate with such an inquiry.



FORMER FLQ terrorist Pierre Vallieres claims that the federal government is fabricating a situation whereby it could move troops into Quebec — harkening back to the October Crisis of 1970 and the the declaration of the War Measures Act which followed a double kidnapping and a murder by the FLQ.

Separatism Just Plain Madness: Hutchinson

CALGARY (CP) — Separatism is "just plain madness" that would impoverish the fragments of Canada and facilitate a complete takeover by the United States, according to Bruce Hutchinson, editorial director of the Vancouver Sun.

Speaking to the Canadian Club, he said even Alberta could not escape "the impoverishment for long."

A separate Quebec would find its culture identity engulfed by the overpowering influence of the Americans, he claimed.

Meanwhile, the two remaining English fragments would disintegrate into smaller units that "would soon petition for entry into the great republic to the south — on its terms."

"Our greatest achievement is the partnership — never easy, always clumsy and prickly — of two diverse peoples," Hutchinson said.

"The first step is dissolving the national state of Canada. The rest will follow naturally and rapidly."

He said separatists are ignoring the intangible benefits of a country combining to cultures in a dual state.

"Now, we've begun to debate the dismemberment of the nation as if it were a failure," he said, adding the debates wrongly depict the country as a corporation rather than a nation based on tolerance of differences and give and take.

Canada now is enduring the backlash of a post-war euphoria that inflamed the desires beyond the abilities of Canadians to satisfy them, he said.

This backlash has driven "us into increasing reliance on foreign loans and pushed our productivity rate to one of the lowest in the world."

"Canada is not dying," he said. "It's suffering the withdrawal symptoms of a long economic debauch."

Special UN Meet Status Denied

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government has refused to give special status to Quebec at a United Nations conference despite a threat by the province to boycott the meetings, officials said Friday.

They said the province demanded special status on a federal - provincial delegation that will attend the UN conference on water in Mar del Plata, Argentina, next week.

In the end the province got no more than Prince Edward Island, Ontario, Saskatchewan and Manitoba — two delegates each on a Canadian delegation of 20 persons and all the advisers they want.

The UN conference is to look at the water resources around the world to see, first, how they can be preserved and, second, how the ever-widening dry areas of the world can be served.

Quebec and the other four provinces expressed strong interest in the conference and talks started last summer on their involvement in the delegation that will be led by Ray Perrault of British Columbia, government leader in the Senate.

UNITY GROUP

OTTAWA (FP) — A new group called Commitment Canada is about to join the ranks of organizations being set up to promote nation unity as a result of the election of the Parti Quebecois.

The new movement which organizers hope will focus on the "grass roots" is to be officially launched with a meeting Monday on Parliament Hill.

Organizers of Commitment Canada are to outline their plans and announced their programs at a briefing session for MPs.

An advance notice of the briefing says the movement is "a national volunteer organization formed to provide a focus for expressions of national unity by Canadians from all walks of life."

PQ Defeat Forecast

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — Jean Chretien, federal minister of industry, trade and commerce, said Friday he expects the Parti Quebecois to be defeated in the next Quebec election.

"A lot of my friends voted PQ, not because they wanted to separate but because they wanted to get rid of former premier Robert Bourassa," Chretien said in an interview.

"Bourassa wasn't corrupt as some have tried to make out. He was just inept."

He called on Canadians to stop "petty bitching" about the language on box tops and in airport towers and to do their part to ensure Quebec stays in Canada.

National Food Policy Sought In Wake of Big Price Jumps

OTTAWA (CP)— Opposition MPs renewed demands Friday for a federal food policy and for a statement about plans to end wage and price controls after figures were published showing a sharp jump in the February inflation rate.

Statistics Canada reported Friday that the consumer price index had jumped nine-tenths of one per cent during February, mainly because of a second consecutive month of large food price increases.

In the Commons, James McGrath said inflation likely will worsen later this year because there may be drought conditions affecting crops in Western Canada.

Finance Minister Donald Macdonald noted that food prices still are rising at a lower rate than they were two years ago.

He rejected McGrath's suggestion that there is a contest within cabinet between Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan and Consumer Affairs Minister Tony Abbott that is preventing the government from developing some kind of national strategy to control food price rises while ensuring producers a fair return.

Macdonald said a national food policyy is no protection against conditions, like droughts, that affect crops.

Sinclair Stevens asked Macdonald whether the government still feels it can meet its stated target of a six-per-cent inflation rate by the end of this year.

Macdonald said the rise in food prices during January and February had been anticipated. If enough control is exercised over non-food items measured by the consumer price index, particularly services, then six per cent remains an attainable target.

February was the second successive month in which food prices rose strongly, after a year of relative price stability. Fresh produce, particularly vegetables, pushed consumer costs up in Febuary.

DIEFENBAKER RAISES A BURNING ISSUE

OTTAWA (CP) — John Diefenbaker pleaded with the government Friday to join in a round-the-world burning of bonfires June 6 to celebrate the Queen's silver jubilee.

Diefenbaker, 81, cited reports that Canada, because of costs, would not be taking part in a celebration whereby bonfires would be ignited in various Commonwealth countries, the burning to be covered by television and relayed by satellite around the Commonwealth.

"Surely the government is not going to follow a niggardly policy,'' Diefenbaker protested in the Commons.

"I remember that we did have some discussion on the feasibility of lighting bonfires," replied John Roberts, secretary of state.

He added, tongue in cheek: "I will have to consider not only bhe cost of starting the fires, but the cost of putting them out.

Times News Services

OTTAWA — An alternative to a public inquiry into the steps towards provincehood was offered to the Northwest Territories legislative council Friday by Northern Affairs Minister Warren Allmand.

Allmand, who summoned the council here for a special meeting, offered to appoint a special representative to consult fulltime with council on future political development.

The 15-member elected council has refused to approve the territorial government's $243 million budget for fiscal 1977-78 until Ottawa agrees to a public inquiry. The N.W.T. government needs the money for April 1.

The president of the Indian Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories said, meanwhile, that an Indian government in the north would control profits earned by resource industries of the Indian
